Controversy over energy competition shadows Sun Day

© Chicago Sun-Times

Earth Day, 1970, was the symbolic event that sent the environmental movement into high gear.

Sun Day, 1978, is a similar national effort to generate public interest in the wider use of solar energy.

Sun Day, the climax of a series of solar-related programs, is Wednesday. It has the formal endorsement of President Carter, Congress and state and local officials.

With such bipartisan support, "Sun Day" obviously has something going for it.

On the surface, this revival of organized sun worship appears noncontroversial. In reality, it's not.

Sponsors of Sun Day would like to transform the nation's energy framework into one that, like the Earth itself, revolves around the sun. But that sets up a conflict with such competing forms of energy as coal, oil, gas and nuclear power.

Denis Hayes, who organized Earth Day eight years ago, is the prime mover behind the national Sun Day observance. Formerly Illinois' energy director, he is trying to form a coalition to push rapid development in the solar field.

One goal of Sun Day is to get across the idea that practical, economic uses of solar energy are available here and now. But the sponsors also want to convert the resulting awareness into a base for a solar energy "lobby."

Solar energy research has come a long way since 1974, when the federal government was spending less than $10 million a year in the field. In the current fiscal year, the U.S. Energy Department has allocated $390 million of a total research development budget of $3.6 billion. Slightly less is included in the proposed new budget of the Carter administration.

Where does solar energy actually stand in the present scheme?

Engineer Richard Gariboldi, who supervises about one-third of 150 solar construction projects out of the Energy Conservation Service Corp. in Chicago, reports that interest is high.

"We do a fantastic amount of responding to inquiries about solar energy. Most of the pressure comes from the grass roots. The amounts of federally funded research is probably equaled by the amount funded privately. There are something like 200 solar collector manufacturers in the country, including big companies. And there are some first-class, high-quality collectors on the market at prices that are reasonable."

Yet Gariboldi said the public seems to have a split view of solar systems to heat and cool buildings and provide hot water.

"You run into a healthy skepticism," he said. "When it comes to buying a unit, the public is very skeptical. On the other hand, they want solar energy developed."

In Gariboldi's opinion, the major barrier to wider use of solar heating and cooling systems is the expense of installation.

FLAGS OF CANADA, DENMARK, U.S., JAPAN UNFURLED AT POLE
... from sled of Japanese explorer Naomi Uemura after 500 mile trip

Solo explorer, dogs attain goal of pole

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Japanese explorer overcame polar bear attacks, a three-day snowstorm and impassable ice ridges to become the first man to reach the North Pole alone by dog sled, the National Geographic Society reported Monday.

Naomi Uemura, 37, made it to the pole Sunday after spending 54 days crossing more than 500 miles of frozen Arctic Ocean from Cape Columbia on Ellesmere Island in Canada's remote Northwest Territories.

His progress was followed by a space agency satellite that monitored radio signals from a small battery-powered radio transmitter mounted on the sled, and confirmed by an airplane that rendezvoused with him at the pole.

Uemura had planned to travel by sled from the pole to northern Greenland and then proceed southward through Greenland's isolated interior. The National Geographic Society said, however, that breakup of ice between the pole and Greenland forced a change in plans.

Instead, Uemura and his dogs will be airlifted to the northern tip of Greenland where he will have to climb an ice mountain nearly 10,000 feet high before attempting to become the first man to traverse the island's 1,678-mile length.

Uemura began his expedition March 7 and was attacked two days later by a polar bear. The marauder ate most of the food for Uemura's 17 sled dogs and destroyed his tent. The next day, after an airplane replenished the dog food supply, the bear returned and Uemura shot and killed it from a range of 75 yards.

Pressure ridges — jagged mounds of compressed ice sometimes more than 30 feet high — impeded Uemura's progress from the outset. At times he could unload his sled, carry his supplies across on his back, then lead the dogs and empty sled across the ridge.

Carter turns down jet sale delay bid

© Washington Star

WASHINGTON — The White House plans to reject the latest effort by Congressional opponents to delay consideration of a controversial sale of jet planes to Saudi Arabia and two other Middle East nations, according to knowledgeable sources.

President Carter is studying a request by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the arms package be withdrawn to give Congress additional time to consider the proposal. But high administration officials already have passed the word to the committee that they will not grant the delay.

Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher Monday notified Sen. Frank Church, a leading Democratic opponent of the sale, that the administration would not agree to an extension of the 30 days Congress has by law to consider arms sales to foreign nations.

At the White House Monday afternoon, Carter received Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in a ceremony to mark the 30th anniversary of the state of Israel. Carter's repeated assurances of unflagging U.S. support for the Jewish state seemed directed in part at calming Israeli fears aroused by the proposal to sell sophisticated jets to the Arabs.

Administration officials indicated there was little possibility that Carter would change his mind about the timing on the sales despite a formal committee request for a delay late Monday.

"The president, of course, will want to consider the request, but it's unlikely that he'll want to delay the arms proposals at this late date," said one official. Another source knowledgeable about administration strategy pointed out that delay would require Carter's withdrawal of the formal notification of the deals, and that would have serious repercussions in the Middle East.

"The Arab governments are already getting very jittery at this stage, and they would view the question of withdrawal as a very serious one," he said.

In the absence of a delay, the Senate committee planned to begin this week public hearings on the arms package, which involves the sale of 60 F-15 fighter planes to Saudi Arabia, 75 F-16s and 15 F-15s to Israel and 50 less-sophisticated F-5s to Egypt. Church, D-Idaho, who will become chairman of the committee next year, said hearings could begin as soon as Wednesday, leading to a possible vote by the panel early next week.

Meanwhile, Carter Monday won the support in another key Congressional leader for the arms sale. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., who earlier had been critical of the package, announced that he now supports the proposal and will work for its approval in the House.

"These decisions don't come easily," said O'Neill, D-Mass.

Mondale reaches Manila

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — Vice President Walter Mondale, the highest-ranking Carter Administration official to visit Southeast Asia, arrived in the Philippines today and pledged anew the U.S. commitment to the progress of the Asia-Pacific region.

"We are a nation of the Pacific and we are fully committed to a positive and forward-looking participation in the affairs of the Pacific region," Mondale said in an arrival statement on the first leg of a five-nation tour. Other stops on the 12-day trip include Thailand, Indonesia, New Zealand and Australia.

Greeted by President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife Imelda, Mondale told the Filipino leader he looked forward to negotiations intended to improve economic and military ties between the two nations.

"We value our mutually beneficial defense relationship with the Philippines, a relationship which makes a vital contribution to the security of both of our nations, a relationship we look forward to continuing now and in the years ahead," Mondale said.

Western rock formations may store atomic wastes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Geological Survey said today critical "geologic stumbling blocks" must be removed before the nation can confidently bury its atomic wastes in permanent underground storage sites.

Among the potential problems to be resolved, a survey task force said, are uncertainties about what might happen when very hot waste containers are placed underground, and about how water moves through paths below the ground.

The task force recommended that the Energy Department investigate storage in deep rock formations or in relatively shallow "unsaturated zones of the arid West" as well as storage in underground salt formations.

"Radioactive wastes from nuclear reactors used to generate electricity are accumulating in temporary storage facilities across the country," said Dr. Newell Trask, a spokesman for the report team.

"Continued expansion of nuclear power depends on an acceptable solution to the problem of how to isolate from the environment for thousands to hundreds of thousands of years the current and future wastes that will be generated."

Radioactive waste disposal ranks among the most serious of the problems facing nuclear power. President Carter called initially for development of a permanent waste disposal system by 1985, but an Energy Department report recently said it would be at least 1988 before such a system could be in operation.

"Although confident that acceptable underground repositories for radioactive wastes can be constructed," the scientists concluded, "... a number of potential geologic stumbling blocks must first be dealt with."

The team cited five "critical areas" in need of greater study:

—Salt bed behavior. The report said "relatively small amounts of brine appear to cause substantial decrease of mechanical strength that would permit movement of waste during a relatively short time."

—The possibility of disposal in formation other than salt beds. The report said rock burial might provide "the most certain safe containment of radioactive wastes," but suggested that thick, water-free deposits in the West might also be acceptable.

—Ground water movement. The report said more information is needed about how water moves around potential storage sites, and it said this task would be "costly and time consuming."

—Better ways to evaluate deposit areas. The report said there is still a need to devise ways to better estimate the geologic stability of storage areas.

—Environmental effects on surrounding geologic formations.

Leonard, Seiffert to meet with Carter Friday

SUNNY

Some clouds, some sun — Details, P. 9

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — President Jimmy Carter will meet with a small group of Northwest government officials in Portland on Friday and two Magic Valley officials have been asked to attend.

Twin Falls County Commissioner Merl Leonard and Ketchum Mayor Jerry Seiffert are two of seven Idaho officials who will meet with the president Friday morning at a breakfast meeting at Portland's Benson Hotel.

White House officials say President Carter requested a meeting with Northwest mayors and county commissioners to discuss the problems of small cities in the region.

Between 18 and 20 officials from Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Alaska will breakfast with the president Friday morning, according to Dave Dougherty, staff director of the Northwest Federal Regional Council which oversees the 11 departments of federal government in the northwest.

Dougherty said President Carter wants to get a first hand reading on how current federal programs are affecting small cities in the Northwest.

In addition to Leonard and Seiffert, the White House has invited Boise Mayor Dick Eardley, Parma Mayor Patricia Romanko, Ammon Mayor George Wehmann, Bannock County Commissioner Boyd Johnson and Latah County Commissioner Jerry Morris to attend the Portland meeting.

Dougherty said he expected the president's recently announced urban policy and the effects of government energy facilities on small cities to be important topics at the breakfast meeting.

Leonard, who admitted it was "a complete surprise" to him to be picked for the grassroots meeting, said he wished to convey to the President the need for greater federal participation in health care programs and regional manpower development programs. He said city transportation and sewer system development needed greater federal aid.

"I think there will be many benefits to making the President aware of some of our community issues," Leonard said. He called the meeting "a tremendous opportunity, one that does not often make itself available to local grass roots officials."

Seiffert said he would wait until the Friday morning meeting to determine precisely what he would say to Carter. He said he wanted to see what context the meeting would be set in before making any comments. Carter is expected to spend about 1½ hours with the local government officials.

Seiffert did note that use of natural resources on federal lands had tremendous impact on small cities and he stated that "there are some questions as to which side of the coin we come down on." He said small cities are tremendously dependent on the natural resources and decisions by the Bureau of Land Management and other federal agencies in the west deeply affect towns like Ketchum.

Neither Leonard nor Seiffert knew precisely why they were chosen to meet with the President.

Both men were contacted by White House officials over the weekend and then received a formal written invitation Monday by mail.

Leonard stated that the breakfast meeting would be "a bi-partisan situation for grass roots input." He said there will be both Democrats and Republicans meeting with President Carter.

The President was originally scheduled to meet with a group of northwest governors in Portland but White House officials said he requested the opportunity to meet with some locally elected officials and the governors meeting was re-scheduled.

Reward offered for missing million

© Chicago Sun-Times

CHICAGO — The First National Bank of Chicago is prepared to pay up to $200,000 to anyone who can solve the mystery of its missing $1 million.

Specifically, the bank Monday offered $100,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who made off with the million in cash last year during the Columbus Day weekend Oct. 8-10.

In addition, he bank said it will pay a bonus of 10 per cent of the amount recovered if the information helps the bank regain all or part of its missing cash. Thus, a bonus of $100,000 would be possible if the full $1 million were recovered.

Right-wing governments didn't bother Mao, Nixon says

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Richard M. Nixon says that during his historic trip to China in 1972 Mao Tse-tung told him that he was "comparatively happy" when right-wing governments took power in Western countries.

In the third of seven installments from his memoirs, the former president provided a few new details of his China initiative — probably the single most important foreign policy move of his administration, including portions of his four-hour conversation with Chairman Mao.

Until now, official American participants in meetings with Mao, who died in 1976, have kept the content of their discussions confidential. The Nixon installment breaks the secrecy but provides virtually no insights into Nixon's strategic thinking or the actual contents of his serious discussions with the Chinese.

Nixon's China initiative was undertaken, in secrecy with Henry A. Kissinger, his national security affairs adviser, early in the administration. The world was stunned when it was announced that Kissinger in July 1971 had made a clandestine trip to Peking and that Mao had invited Nixon to visit him, in effect ending two decades of estrangement between Washington and Peking.

Discussing Kissinger's secret trip to China, Nixon said, "Before Kissinger left, we agreed on a single code word — Eureka — which he would use if his mission were successful and the presidential trip had been arranged."

"On July 11, Kissinger's aide, Al Haig, phoned that a cable from Kissinger had arrived," Nixon said.

"What's the message?' I asked."

"Eureka,' he replied."

Nixon said that he had been impressed by Chou En-lai, the late Chinese premier, with whom he and Kissinger did most of their talking. In 1954, Chou was snubbed publicly when at a Geneva meeting the American secretary of state, John Foster Dulles, declined to shake hands with him.

"I knew that Chou had been deeply insulted by Foster Dulles' refusal to shake hands with him at the Geneva conference in 1954," Nixon wrote. "When I reached the bottom step, therefore, I made a point of extending my hand as I walked toward him. When our hands met, one era ended and another began."

Chou later took note of this when he told Nixon, according to the installment, "Today we shook hands, but John Foster Dulles didn't want to do that."

As to his meeting with Mao, Nixon said that it began, through an interpreter, with bantering about Kissinger's highly publicized friendships with women. His "dates" had been used as covers for his secret trips to Paris for talks with North Vietnamese officials.

Mao remarked on Kissinger's cleverness in keeping his first trip to Peking secret," Nixon said.

"He doesn't look like a secret agent," I said. "He is the only man in captivity who could go to Paris 12 times and Peking once, and no one knew it — except possibly a couple of pretty girls.' "

"So you often make use of your girls?' Mao asked."

"His girls, not mine,' I replied. 'I would get me into great trouble if I used girls as a cover.' "

"Especially during an election," Chou remarked as Mao joined in the laughter."

Then, Nixon related Mao's discussion about right-wing governments:

"I like rightists,' Mao said, obviously enjoying himself. 'People say that you are rightists — that the Republican party is on the right — that Prime Minister Heath is also to the right.'

"They also say the Christian Democratic Party of West Germany is to the right. I am comparatively happy when these people on the right come into power.'

Mao had made the same point about "rightists" in an interview with the late Edgar Snow in 1970, who quoted Mao as saying that Mao preferred Nixon to Social Democrats and revisionists because he would probably be less deceitful than the others. It was also a calculated decision by Mao to counter the Russians.

In the installment, Nixon did not address the Chinese problem with the Soviet Union that produced border clashes in 1969. He also did not mention any reported effort by the Russians to enlist American support against the Chinese — something discussed by H.R. Haldeman, Nixon's top aide, but denied by others, in his recent book.

Nixon said that he told Mao, "I would like to say that we know you and the prime minister have taken great risks in inviting us here."

"For us also it was a difficult decision. But having read some of your statements, I know that you are one who sees when an opportunity comes and then knows that you must seize the hour and seize the day." He said that Mao had beamed at this paraphrase from one of his poems.

Italian police nab Red Brigade link

ROME (UPI) — Libero Maesano, a man linked to the Red Brigades, was arrested today as he met with his mother and sister, giving police one of the few breaks they have had since the ultra-left guerrilla gang kidnapped ex-Premier Aldo Moro 47 days ago.

Investigators said Maesano had links with Valerio Morucci, one of nine accused Red Brigades leaders for whom arrest warrants were issued last week in connection with the Moro kidnapping.

They said Maesano, who has a criminal record, was suspected of having helped Morucci smuggle weapons into Italy from Switzerland.

Maesano's mother, sister and two unidentified persons were also detained.

Police said Maesano's whereabouts had been unknown for some time. They caught up to him when he kept an appointment to meet his mother and sister in Rome's government office district.

In another development, a Vatican spokesman refused to confirm or deny persistent reports that Pope Paul VI received a letter from Moro from the kidnappers' hideout.

Asked directly if a letter to the pope was among letters written by Moro to top statesmen last weekend, Vatican spokesman Father Romeo Panciroli said: "I am observing the greatest discretion about it."

He said later he was referring to the whole Moro affair and not just the question about a letter.

Moro, seized March 16 after his five guards were slain, wrote Italy's major legislators urging them to accept a Red Brigades demand that 13 jailed comrades be released in exchange for his life.

But the ruling Christian Democrats, backed by mass demonstrations support-ing their refusal to debate the matter, decided in a meeting with Premier Giulio Andreotti Monday to keep handling of the Moro crisis in their own hands.

Requests for a parliamentary debate on the kidnapping and the government's handling of the crisis came from two small leftist parties, the Radicals and Proletarian Democrats.

The Christian Democrats reaffirmed the no-negotiations stance despite Moro's appeal in letters to government leaders that his life be exchanged for 13 imprisoned Red Brigades terrorists.

Millions of Italian workers participating in May Day rallies throughout Italy voiced support of the government's refusal to negotiate with the Red Brigades, who kidnapped Moro March 16, killing his five bodyguards.

In Rome, 25,000 workers marched from the Colosseum to the Square of St. John Lateran bearing signs reading: "No Deal With The Red Brigades," "No Bartering" and "Red Brigades Only Create Blood."

The rallies followed a rash of letters in Moro's trembling hand, a strong denunciation of party policies from his family and a spate of telephone calls setting conflicting deadlines for the former premier's "execution."

Investigators said they believed telephone calls to news media setting various deadlines were the work of cranks. But they had no comment on a call the Moro family received Sunday.

Christian Democratic sources said that call gave the family three hours to do something to save Moro's life. They said the family's public attack Sunday on the party's no-negotiations stance may have been a response to the threat.

Labor law reform bill battle closer

©Washington Star

WASHINGTON — After months of skirmishing between labor and business lobbyists, the Senate leadership has decided to bring the Carter administration's controversial labor law reform bill to the floor May 15.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd Monday ironed out the final date for consideration of the bill with the Republican leadership.

Earlier Monday, Byrd told reporters that proponents of the measure believe they have enough votes for cloture to shut off a filibuster, while opponents say they have enough votes to maintain a filibuster.

Opponents, led by Sens. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Jesse Helms, R-N.C., have pledged to mount an effort to scuttle the legislation through amendments.

Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., a prime backer of the bill in the Senate, said Monday that "I hope it will get all the debate the issue deserves and needs — about two weeks."

Williams added that "the issues are simple and clear and this is not complicated or far reaching" as the opponents say.

Others, however, felt the debate might take longer than that.

Labor organizations, which strongly support the measure, had originally hoped the bill would be brought up in January or February, but it was delayed by consideration of the Panama Canal treaties and other issues.

This week, the AFL-CIO labor reform task force stepped up its campaign on behalf of the legislation, bringing in workers whose organizing efforts have been thwarted by employers to man a "victim's vigil" at the Capitol. The vigil will be manned by various unions until the Senate votes on the bill.

From the other side, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has been holding its annual convention in Washington this week and businessmen have also been active in lobbying against the bill on the Hill.

Both labor and business have engaged in one of the most vigorous legislative battles on the Hill in recent years over this legislation and are spending millions of dollars. The announcement of a final date for consideration of the bill, which easily passed the House last year, is expected to bring those campaigns to new heights.

The Carter administration, which sponsored the legislation, maintains that the measure is designed primarily to streamline and speed up union certification hearings before the National Labor Relations Board.

The most controversy revolves around clauses giving union organizers "equal access" to employees while working if employers use on-the-job antiunion meetings to get their point across, providing 1½ times back pay for workers fired illegally for their involvement in organizing campaigns, and permitting the secretary of labor to bar continued violators of labor laws from getting government contracts for up to three years.

The opposition has been particularly effective in whipping up concerns of small business about the legislation and supporters of the bill admit there appears to be some sentiment in the Senate to somehow soften the impact on the segment of the economy.

Labor lobbyists, however, are reluctant to make any more concessions. The Senate Human Resources Committee earlier this year softened some of the provisions in an effort to head off some of the opposition.

"I thought we had reduced it to its lowest denominator so that it would not need more amendments," Williams said.

Labor maintains the legislation is needed to guarantee the rights of employees to join together into labor organizations. The industry, they maintain, will stop employers such as the J.P. Stevens Co. — branded by unions as the No. 1 labor law violator in the country — from using delaying tactics to stop unionization of their plants.

Heavy rain, deep snow ease Colorado dry spell

By United Press International

Heavy snow blanketed mountainous areas of the West and Plains today while violent spring storms pounded sections of the Southeast.

A foot of snow fell at Berthoud Pass, Colo., and another 6 inches covered Rocky Mountain National Park. At least 8 inches of snow fell at Williams, Ariz., west of Flagstaff.

Although most ski areas already were closed for the season, farmers and ranchers anticipated the spring snow would help end effects of last summer's drought.

Up to 2 inches of rain fell on Colorado's Plains Monday, then snow began. Farmers said the moisture was reviving the parched winter wheat crop.

About 35 anti-nuclear demonstrators at the Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant built a plastic shelter to keep out the snow.

A series of funnel clouds accompanied thunderstorms through the Gulf Coast states. A tornado watch was up for extreme eastern Texas and much of Louisiana and southern Mississippi. A severe thunderstorm watch was issued for most of central and northern Florida and a small part of southeast Georgia. No damage was reported from Monday night's funnel clouds.

Selma, Ala., Mayor Joe Smitherman awaited results of a state Civil Defense survey before deciding whether to seek federal aid for his tornado-stricken city. Officials estimated damage to homes and businesses at about $1 million.

Only one minor injury was reported when the twister skipped along the city's east side early Monday, punching holes in brick walls, unroofing homes, snapping utility poles and uprooting trees.

The First Baptist Church, used by the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. during the civil rights movement of the mid-1960s, was shattered. At least 56 homes were damaged in a 14-block area.

A tornado-like storm also was reported virtually at the same time in the town of Carrville, Ala., about 100 miles to the east. There were no injuries in that storm, but an apartment complex was damaged.

Oklahoma officials estimated damage from a series of tornadoes between Piedmont and Oklahoma City Monday at a minimum of $1.5 million and possibly twice that much.

Authorities said at least 15 homes and five barns were destroyed and 13 other houses were damaged.

Baseball-size hail was reported at Meridian, Texas, and east of Brook Haven, Miss., Monday night.

Jacksonville, Fla., and Macon, Ga., reported nearly 1 inch of rain.

The thunderstorms were triggered by a large mass of unseasonably cool air, which dominated the eastern two thirds of the nation. Record lows were set in numerous cities Monday and more records were expected today, causing growers to fear early crops might be harmed by frost.

Plot fails

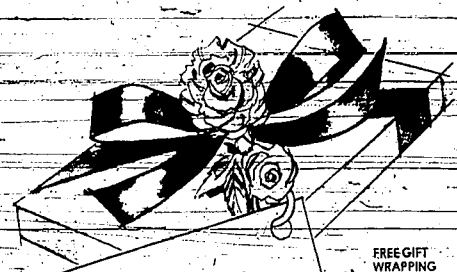

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Eight Laotians have been sentenced to death by a "people's court" for allegedly plotting to overthrow the Communist government of Laos, the government newspaper said today.

The newspaper Voice of the People said 49 people were arrested last Nov. 16 for involvement in the alleged plot.

French troops open fire

TYRE, LEBANON (UPI) — French U.N. troops opened fire on a band of Palestinian guerrillas trying to infiltrate past their lines in southern Lebanon early today, killing one and wounding two, a French spokesman said.

In north Lebanon, a powerful car bomb exploded in Zaghorta, the hometown of rightist militia chief and former President Suleiman Franjieh, injuring 30 persons, seven of them critically, according to initial reports.

The firefight between French U.N. troops and Palestinian guerrillas — the second such incident in two days — occured near the town of Bazouriyeh, inland from the southwest port of Tyre.

A French U.N. spokesman said his troops opened fire on the Palestinians after they tripped a warning flare near U.N. lines shortly after midnight.

Retirement changes ahead

©New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Major but gradual changes in retirement policy, including the encouragement of people to go on working long beyond age 65, were recommended Monday by a leading Social Security expert, A. Haeworth Robertson.

"Less strenuous jobs and part-time employment must be made available" by private employers for elderly workers, he said in a speech to businessmen attending the 66th annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Robertson, a former chief actuary of the Social Security Administration, suggested that the government stop basing monthly old-age benefits on a person's earnings. Instead, he said, the government should develop a uniform benefit to be paid to all persons reaching a certain age in any one year.

The benefit would be paid, he said, even if the recipient continued to work. By discontinuing the present Social Security practice of penalizing pensioners for earnings above a set amount, Robertson said, the government would encourage people to continue to work for their old age.

Social Security policy sets an example for the entire country, Robertson said, and that example has created an expectation of a work-free old age — the great American retirement dream," he called it — that is becoming increasingly burdensome as the ratio of retired people to working people increases.

"The nation's concept of work, education, leisure and retirement must be revised," he said. "It must be presumed that an individual will engage in gainful employment suitable to his physical and mental condition until an age well beyond age 60 or 65 and possibly until the end of his life."

Despite the future increases in payroll taxes that were mandated by the 1977 Social Security law, Robertson said, there will be large deficits in Social Security financing in the first half of the next century unless there are further tax increases. The present payroll tax rate of 6.05 percent paid by each employer and employee will have to rise to 12 percent for each, he said.

However, Robertson seemed to rule out such increases as politically unacceptable. "There is growing public dissatisfaction with the Social Security program even at today's levels of taxation," he said. "Further escalation in taxes will only add to this unrest."

Publisher happy with court ruling

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Virginia newspaper publisher says he is happy but not surprised that the Supreme Court has affirmed the freedom of the press to write stories about confidential hearings on a judge's competence.

The high court's ruling "is gratifying, but not surprising," Perry Morgan, publisher of the Virginian-Pilot newspaper, said Monday in Norfolk.

"It accords with common sense and past rulings by the court. It means that newspapers can print the truth about government officials, including judges, without fear of criminal punishment," he said.

The Supreme Court on a 7-0 decision reversed the conviction of Landmark Communications Inc., which publishes the Virginian-Pilot, for carrying a story about a hearing into charges of incompetence brought against a Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court judge.

Chief Justice Warren Burger, speaking for the court, said the First Amendment does not let states punish outsiders with criminal sanctions for divulging or publishing truthful information about such confidential proceedings.

"Neither the commonwealth's interest in protecting the reputation of its judges, nor in maintaining the institutional integrity of its courts is sufficient to justify the subsequent punishment of speech at issue here," he said.

He cited a dissent in which Justice Felix Frankfurter once said speech cannot be punished when the purpose is simply "to protect the court as a mystical entity or the judges ... as anhoinled priests."

More than 40 states have some kind of confidential judicial inquiry and disciplinary procedures, Burger noted, but only Virginia and Hawaii have established criminal sanctions for disclosure. Landmark was fined $500 for violating the Virginia statute.

In another action Monday, the court agreed to rule under what circumstances a judge may close a pretrial hearing to the press in order to protect a defendant.

The justices will hear arguments next winter on a challenge by the Gannett Co. publisher of two Rochester, N.Y., newspapers, to a judge's decision to keep the press out of a hearing on admission of evidence in a pending murder case.

The Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press said the case presents a significant First Amendment question because 89 percent of all federal and state indictments never come to trial and are settled during pretrial proceedings.

Counterspy takes stand

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (UPI) — A woman counterspy was called on today to give a trial jury more details about stolen U.S. secret documents she delivered to Hanoi agents in Paris while working at the same time for the CIA.

Known as an operative code-named "Keyseal," she was identified as Dung Krall, daughter of a former Viet Cong ambassador to the Soviet Union, although she is known to be married to a U.S. naval intelligence officer, who never has been publicly identified.

As the government's key witness in the trial of a former U.S. Information Agency official and a Vietnamese expatriot on espionage charges, Ms. Krall cited names, dates and places of contacts in Washington and in Paris with a seemingly effortless memory.

The two men on trial were accused in a seven-count indictment of conspiring to funnel top-secret documents, obtained by Humphrey, to Hanoi officials via a courier.

Aid limits drawn

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration, during Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance's visit to Moscow last month to advance a new strategic arms accord, agreed to a vaguely worded provision that would limit future American cooperation on nuclear weapons with allied governments in Western Europe, officials said Monday.

It had been reported previously that Soviet and American negotiators had agreed to restrict any effort by the two sides to circumvent the provisions of the main treaty, which would last until 1985, or the limited protocol, which would run for three years. However, it has been learned that this restriction will also affect potential European-American efforts to collaborate on strategic weapons.

The provision says that "to impair the viability" of an arrangement limiting Soviet and American strategic missiles and bombers, both nations will not take actions "through third states" that would weaken it. But it does not specify what types of activity would be ruled out in the accord.

Carter focuses on the East

© 1978 N.Y. Times Service

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration is now making a conscious effort to emphasize and improve its relations with the countries of Asia. In the next few weeks, Prime Minister Fukuda of Japan will be in Washington, Vice President Mondale will be touring Southeast Asia, and Zbigniew Brzezinski, the president's national security adviser, will confer with the new Chinese leaders in Peking.

JAMES RESTON

These missions are more symbolic than substantive. The president and Fukuda do have practical trade and monetary questions to discuss, but the Mondale and Brzezinski missions are designed to remove the feeling that Washington has been neglecting Asia in its preoccupation with the Middle East, Africa and the Soviet Union.

The Brzezinski entry into China is being compared to Henry Kissinger's secret journey to that country during the Nixon administration. It has even been suggested here that, against the advice of Secretary of State Vance, Brzezinski has chosen this moment to remind Moscow that Washington can always move closer to China if it cannot get more cooperation with the Soviet Union in Africa and on arms control.

There is some truth in this, but not much. The Brzezinski mission was planned months ago and is not a reaction to Vance's recent visit to Moscow or Washington's differences with the Soviet Union over the use of Cuban troops in Africa.

Carter has enough trouble now with the opponents of his Panama policy, his arms shipments to the Middle East, and his efforts to negotiate a strategic arms treaty with the Soviet Union to provoke a new fight with them by establishing formal diplomatic relations with Peking at the expense of Taiwan. This he will undoubtedly want to do, perhaps next year, but not now.

There are other reasons for this new turn to the East. Carter has some serious problems in Asia. Japan's spectacular trade surplus with the United States has put him under increasing pressure from Big Labor and some powerful factions in Big Business for protectionist policies the administration opposes. He has to retain the U.S. military bases in the Philippines, which are critical to the defense of the Pacific, even if the authoritarian Marcos regime in Manila delays his policy on human rights. And Carter cannot ignore the post-Vietnam developments in South Asia and Southeast Asia.

For example, there has been a long decline in the normally good relations between the United States and India. Accordingly, Carter went there recently and has now agreed, over the objection of many of his advisers, to restore the shipment of nuclear fuel for peaceful purposes to that country.

Mondale will be in Southeast Asia for the next couple of weeks because, while America's members of that part of the world are agnostic that few people want to think about it, the Soviet Union, China, and Japan have not been indifferent to Southeast Asia's economic and strategic importance.

In the last 11 years, the countries of Southeast Asia outside the Vietnam war zone have formed a regional Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) — Indonesia, Thailand, Singapore, the Philippines, and Malaysia, who have been working together on their common problems with Australia and New Zealand.

These ASEAN nations, with the exception of Singapore are rich in natural resources. They produce 98 percent of the world's abaca fiber, 80 percent of the world's rubber, more than 60 percent of its copra and tin, and a third of its palm oil.

With Thailand's fertile rice bowl, and Indonesia's, developing oil resources (not to mention the unexploited off-shore petroleum fields in the area) Tokyo has long realized and Moscow, Peking and Washington are beginning to realize that the ASEAN countries now provide perhaps the greatest new potential for profitable partnership with the industrial nations.

At the same time these ASEAN nations also represent not only an economic opportunity but a social and political problem. At the end of the last world war in 1945-46, the total population of the ASEAN countries was about 112 million. Today it is about 230 million. In another 10 years, at present birth rates, it will total about 300 million, and at the end of the century, unless there are significant programs of birth control, it will be about 500 million, requiring these countries to provide 10 million new jobs every year just to keep even with population growth.

So in Southeast Asia, on these projections, it is going to have to be either economic development and jobs or disaster, and officials in Washington, including the criticized "bureaucrats," have been urging a wider and longer perspective on Washington's national interests, priorities, and world responsibilities.

The Carter administration has been so preoccupied for so long with Panama, Angola, Rhodesia, South Africa, and recently with a few dozen fighter airplanes to Saudi Arabia, that it has scarcely had sufficient time to concentrate on the critical immediate problems of Japan and Europe, let alone the coming problems of China and India, Southeast Asia and Latin America, where almost a majority of the human race is living in poverty while the nations of the world spend almost $400 billion a year on military arms.

Fortunately, President Carter is beginning to turn his attention to these larger questions. This new movement toward Asia is not really a personal issue between Vance and Brzezinski, or between the administration and the pro-Israel members of Congress, though there are clearly conflicts between them over priorities.

The main thing is that Asia is clearly critical to the establishment of a world order, and after a period of neglect, Washington is beginning to give it a proper place in planning for the last quarter of the century.

I said in this space the other day that Senator Jackson of Washington met privately with Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan of Israel to discuss Middle East problems, together with several other senators. But I was wrong. The Israeli Embassy had him on the list, but he did not attend the meeting.

Beer and book are marketing nightmares

Two new products are being marketed in Idaho this month.

They are products that may sell quite well, not because they fill a specific consumer need or because they will be offered at a cheap price.

They may sell well because they are the latest products to exploit situations generated by nationwide publicity.

The two products are a book and a beer, specifically Billy Beer and "RN: The Memoirs of Richard Nixon."

The beer may be at least worth one taste to determine if it compares favorably to the more established brands but the bad taste of Nixon's memoirs can be predetermined. The taste is bitter, bordering on rotten.

And the beer at least would have some slight nutritional value.

Billy Carter and Richard Nixon can't be blamed for taking advantage of the built-in popularity of their products. That's the way this nation's business community works. The consumer can be blamed for being sucked into these schemes, however, just as the consumer can be congratulated for following the opposite course.

This is a fine time to rally the consumer into rejecting these latest exploitations. Let's shove these publicity-intensive creations back into the faces of those who created such garbage. Let's tell the business world that there has to be some quality in products these days, not merely news value.

Billy Carter, of course, seems to make news everywhere he goes. That's only natural. He is, after all, the president's brother. He's not the first to take advantage of the fact that he is a relation to the president, and he won't be the last. It's just that he exploits in a manner that isn't exactly subtle. At least the American public can indirectly reject his image by not buying the beer that is being marketed with his name as the sole reason for its existence.

Nixon's product should also be rejected by the American public as a sign that it is fed up with the fact that a man can still milk Americans of their money long after the series of incidents that created his political rejection. As with the Billy Carter situation, Nixon would be a fool not to take advantage of the inherent dollar potential of his product. The ball is in the public's court now, however. The book may slightly satisfy a person's need to know, but how much more can the man say that hasn't already been said, and how many of the memoirs can be believed after so many lies have preceded the book?

But more importantly, at what cost are these new words of wisdom? And the cost in this case is not just the retail cost of the book. The cost involves the individual's own pride and moral principles. Those are the real factors that will be measured by the sales of the book.

Idahoans should display their personal integrity by joining the Washington-based campaign to boycott the Nixon memoirs. It would be a much-needed slap in the face of a man who needs more slapping and of a marketing system that thinks it can sell anything as long as it has a publicity gimmick.

The two products will no doubt have a degree of success.

There will always be a few people who will be manipulated.

These are the people who would still buy even if the products in question were Dick's Beer and "Billy Carter's Memoirs." For the sake of the American pride, let's hope these people only constitute a small minority.

Judge Hoffman looks at long career

"I'm not the kid I used to be," said Julius J. Hoffman, 82. "I wonder if I'll get a nice obituary. Well, I hate to say that at least I've been noticed in my life. Here, come here."

He led his visitor to a corner of his chambers. Hoffman, who is senior judge of the United States District Court in Chicago, has a suite of offices befitting a Hollywood star. There are pictures of him, plaques saluting him, tributes to him posted everywhere. He loves it.

"Look at this," Hoffman said. He pointed to a blowup of a newspaper editorial, clipped from a paper in Altoona, Pa. The headline on the editorial was "A Brave Judge."

The visitor started to read the editorial, but Hoffman was too fast for him. The judge was reading aloud from the editorial in a strong, theatrical voice:

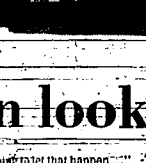

"It may be that Judge Hoffman will go an unsung hero. But, for ourselves, we applaud an heroic judge who has struck the most telling blow against lawlessness in recent years."

Hoffman paused for effect.

"Isn't it surprising," he said, "that a little paper like the one in Altoona can attract some pretty good country writers? Here, look at this one." He pointed to another blowup of an editorial, this one from a newspaper in Racine, Wis. Hoffman again read aloud, mouthing with his arms.

Judge Julius Hoffman, one of the nation's great jurists, is not going to let that happen.

The editorial referred to an alleged destruction of American justice. That was being threatened in Hoffman's courtroom during the conspiracy trial of the Chicago 7, over which he presided in 1969 and 1970. The trial made Hoffman the most controversial judge in the land.

BOB GREENE

"Just yesterday a woman said to me, 'You know, the two best-known judges in the United States are Hoffman and Burger,'" Hoffman said, "Later on, I told that to another person, and that person said, 'Burger? Who's he?

"As you know, I never go on television. Not that I wouldn't like to see how I look and talk. It's the modesty. Everyone likes to have his accomplishments noted. I just think it's inappropriate for a judge to go on television.

"Wallace of '60 Minutes' called me up four times. Twice from New York and twice from Washington. I told him no four times. He told me, 'What? You're turning down an opportunity to be seen by 50 million people?' I told him that I was a federal judge, that I wasn't running for alderman of the 42d Ward.

"That Jewish fellow who ran 'Meet the Press,' what's him name? Spivak? He used to call me, too. I would love to see myself on television, but some of my brothers on the bench resent seeing one of their brethren being catapulted too far above the rest of them." Hoffman chuckled.

"Do you remember that television dramatization of the Chicago 7 trial that was presented several years ago?" he said. "I thought the most competent actor in that company was the Negro who played Bobby Seale. He was a corker. The casting of the judge was unfortunate. The actor was so big and strapping. He was 6 feet, 4 inches tall, not 5 feet, four-and-a-half like the little fellow who presided at the trial. I do have a pretty good voice, though."

His visitor brought up the subject of ego.

"I don't think you can use the word 'ego' to explain that a person has a pleasant feeling about himself," Hoffman said. "If a person deserves to have a pleasant feeling, then he should have it. Why, anyone who goes out to a party and has women he doesn't even know come up to him and kiss him and say, 'Judge Hoffman, am I glad to finally meet you' ... anyone who tells you he doesn't like that isn't telling the truth.

"You know, I think about that Chicago 7 trial sometimes. That Abbie, he had a great sense of humor. I think he had a better sense of humor than Rubin, but I think Rubin had a better sense of decency, he didn't offend as much in the courtroom as Abbie. And then there was the fellow who married Jane Fonda. He ran for the Senate out in California. Got a substantial number of votes.

"I understand that Abbie is a fugitive from justice now. A cocaine charge in New York. They tell me that in some families cocaine is served like salt and pepper, like ice cream. When I was a youngster, you'd go to the dentist's office and they'd inject cocaine into your gum for a tooth.

"You know, I can't act on my philosophy like Jerry Rubin can. Jerry was against the war in Vietnam, and it turned out that the war was a disaster for the country. We lost the war, and it turned out that we shouldn't have been there in the first place. But I had to send boys to prison for evading the draft. And it turned out that many, many good boys went to jail.

"I sometimes like awake at night, half-dreaming, and I think about all those nice looking boys saying, 'I'm guilty. I'm not going to war.' But I had no alternative. I had to send them to jail. I had to. Didn't I?"

Employee cheats Chicago of $46,000

© Chicago Sun-Times

CHICAGO — As soon as some of my friends read about the state employee who wangled $46,000 in poverty funds from City Hall to hold an opera and began using the money to pay non-singing friends and relatives for non-work, they asked me how they could get the same kind of good deal.

One of them said: "Most of my relatives and friends don't work, and those who work would like to break the filthy habit, so how do I go about getting money to hold a softball tournament? I could hire my relatives as umpires and scorekeepers."

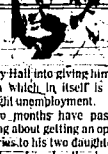

Another said: "If I could come up with a fast $46-thou, I could hold a big polka festival or horseshoe pitching." Or guitar strumming. Anything. Just give me a chance at the dough."

Others said they would like to conduct disco dancing clinics, coho catching seminars, classes in how to put suntan lotion on your own back, and other worthwhile activities.

All promised that they would hire people who are among the hard-core unemployed, and give them "meaningful work," which were the terms of the opera grant.

"Anything you give me cash money to do it meaningful to me, so just slip me the trump," is the way one of my friends put it.

I'm no expert on obtaining federal poverty money, but if the opera grant for "Maestro" Sergio Cruz is an example of how blithely our tax money is being tossed around, then my friend's ideas might be taken seriously in City Hall.

MIKE ROYKO

Cruz talked City Hall into giving him $46,000 to put on an opera which, in itself is kind of a strange way to fight unemployment.

More than two months have passed. Cruz hasn't done a thing about getting an opera going. But he paid salaries to his two daughters, one of the daughter's boy friends, the boy friend's sister, the boy friend's pal, his own pal, and himself.

Under federal law, the money is supposed to be used to hire the hard-core unemployed. But Cruz already has a full-time job with the Illinois Public Aid Department, handing out food stramps on Milwaukee Avenue. And his pal owns a driving school.

How he pulled this whole thing off still isn't completely clear. But apparently it wasn't very difficult.

First of all, Cruz established himself as a leader of Hispanic cultural affairs. He did this by forming something called the Spanish-American Pro-Art and Culture Society (SHAPACS) and incorporating it with the state. It's headquarters are apparently in his kitchen.

Then he printed a few copies of your-page newspaper that is supposed to be about cultural matters, although most of the space contains ads.

Having thus established himself as a genuine cultural leader and publisher, he went to City Hall and made a pitch for the money.

Oh, another thing: He also calls himself "Maestro." He claims that back in Cuba, which he left in 1971, he used to wave batons at orchestras.

First he tried to get the money from the Chicago Fine Arts Council. This is the outfit that used to be run by Heather (Mayor Michael A. Bilandic's wife), until she married the Great Jogger and became our First Blonde.

The Fine Arts Council passes out federal money to keep local artists eating between spasms of creativity. But by the time Cruz put in his bid, their $1.2-million budget was gone.

So his pitch was somehow bucked to the Department of Human Services, under a program that doesn't worry about starving artists but about ordinary unemployed Philistines.

There Cruz's proposal was allegedly reviewed by an advisory committee of 30 community leaders. They are supposed to decide whether a proposal makes sense and will help the unemployed. And the committee decided it should entrust Maestro Cruz with $546,000. With those kind of community leaders, I can understand why our communities are in their present shape.

So Cruz got his grant and he immediately put his clan on his payroll.

Additional Swan Falls info needed

MURPHY (UPI) — Gov. John Evans and Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus said Monday more investigation is needed into raising the Swan Falls and Guffey dams in southwest Idaho.

Evans, who joined with Andrus in a press conference following a raft trip down the Snake River, said "it's too early to make any judgment. The Department of Water Resources will be making an environmental impact statement this summer."

Evans said the department will make recommendations after the statement is completed and that "it is inappropriate at this time to say if the dams should be built."

Andrus agreed, saying "We'll have to look into it further." He also said he sees the construction of more low-head dams in the future to "increase the output without increasing the elevation of existing low head dams."

"But the study on the two dams might show it will be more economically feasible to build high-head dams," he said.

Patrick Noonan, president of Nature Conservancy, said raising the dams could destroy wildlife habitats in the area. That, he said, would necessitate the preservation of more land as habitats.

"If the new dams inundate land that is used as habitats, more habitat land will have to be set aside," he said. He said having to buy more land for habitats will raise the cost of electricity.

"This is one of the most important wildlife areas in the nation," Noonan said of the Snake River Birds of Prey Natural Area. He said some $20,000 has been raised to purchase five parcels of land in the area for habitats. Some $200,000 is hoped for July 1 and the other $300,000 by the end of the year.

All five parcels are within 12 miles of Swan Falls Dam, and all are at the bottom of a canyon which would be flooded if new dams go through.

Andrus said he has a personal opinion regarding the situation but that he does not want to comment "at this time." He said if the dams are built and it takes away the natural habitats, he would help find habitat "equal to or better than what there is now."

Jensen wades in on energy topics

IDAHO FALLS (UPI) — Energy was the topic of the first major political speech of Democratic candidate Dwight Jensen Monday night.

Jensen delivered a half-hour paid television speech in Idaho Falls and called for the development of a national energy policy, while attacking his Republican opponent, Sen. James McClure, for his votes on energy and the environment.

Although Jensen endorsed the idea of a national energy plan, he emphasized that he did not necessarily mean a federal government plan.

"A federal plan implies that all the answers are to be supplied by the federal government," he said. "I don't believe the federal government has all the answers."

The five main points of Jensen's energy proposals were to reduce dependence on foreign oil, rapidly convert the economy away from fossil fuels and toward renewable energy resources, reduce the cost of energy by reducing dependence on coal-fired and nuclear generating plants, insist on a clean and protected environment, and "do all this without sacrificing jobs or economic growth."

"Economic growth does not depend upon the growth of energy consumption," Jensen insisted. "One reason we consume so much energy is that we use energy instead of putting people to work."

Jensen attacked McClure for a wide range of votes concerning energy including votes for tax credits for oil companies, subsidies for water-intensive shale oil development, and tax changes that "would make it cheaper for a company to buy an energy-using machine to do work than to hire people to do the work."

"Senator McClure stands with the oil companies and their short-sighted, self-seeking policies," Jensen charged.

Home burns

BOISE (UPI) — A fire in a west Boise home Monday night caused fire damage to a basement bedroom and smoke damage throughout the basement, but no one was injured, the Boise Fire Department has reported.

An electrical failure in some stereo equipment apparently started the fire at the home of the Don Rayborn family at 5913 Flamingo Drive in Boise.

The family reported the fire at 8:06 p.m. and within minutes the fire department had arrived and extinguished the flames, which were confined to the basement bedroom where the fire began.

Substitution recommended

BOISE (UPI) — A House bill passed by the Legislature should be substituted for a draft version that inadvertently was sent to the governor, an attorney general's opinion said today.

The bill in question, which reorganizes the State Board of Pharmacy, never reached the governor. Instead, a draft version, never introduced somehow was substituted for the one passed by the lawmakers and sent to Gov. John V. Evans for his signature.

Murder charge on file

SANDPOINT (UPI) — Donald Harrington, 46, Bingen, Wash., remained in the Bonner County Jail Monday charged with first degree murder of James Feterhoff, 32, Owosso, Mich.

Feterhoff was shot once in the neck Saturday night outside the Corning Hotel in the north Idaho community of Priest River.

Officers and witnesses said the two men were arguing over the loudness of the muffler system on Fetterhoff's car.

The owner of the hotel, an ex-police officer, said the two had argued over the matter before.

Oil subsidy hike blasted

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, said Tuesday he is appalled by a proposed increase in subsidies to refiners of imported oil and will fight for a veto of the program by Congress.

McClure said western Unified States oil refiners are forced to pay eastern refiners, which raises the cost of petroleum products in the western states. The program is intended to even out the costs of oil on a national basis as eastern refiners buy primarily expensive Middle East oil while western refiners use mainly cheaper domestic crude.

"This program, known as entitlements, already costs Idaho gas and oil customers over $1 million each year," McClure said, "and any proposed broadening of the program is ridiculous."

"It will subsidize those refiners who import oil while penalizing those who use domestic oil, and it encourages increased imports," he added.

Utility lobbyist leads

BOISE (UPI) — The Idaho secretary of state's office said Monday quarterly lobbyist reports indicate a General Telephone Co. of the Northwest representative spent more money lobbying than anyone else last quarter.

John R. Hayes, of Everett, Wash., spent $6,560 during the past quarter, which included the recent legislative session. The money was spent lobbying for 23 legislative pieces, including property taxes, workmen's compensation, and public utilities fees.

Second in expenditures was David O. Cunningham, another utility worker. Cunningham, who works for Washington Water Power Co. in Spokane, Wash., spent $5,552 in his lobbying efforts during January, February and March.

Lobbying with regard to health legislation was Paul Wise, Lewiston, an employee of Blue Cross of Idaho Health Services Inc. He spent $4,551.

Other lobbyists filing prior to the May 1 deadline were Robert W. MacFarlane, president of the Idaho AFL-CIO, $4,102 for several pieces of legislation; Manley L. Brandenburg, Pollatch Corp., $3,664; H.W. White, Associated Logging Contractors, $3,534 for natural resources legislation; and R.L. Hollingsworth, a Salt Lake City businessman, for right to work legislation.

A total of $80,258 was spent during the quarter including $45,005 for entertainment, food, and refreshments; $20,884 for living association; $16,803 for travel; $2,461 for telephone; $1,599 for office expenses; $4,250 for other expenses; and $261 for advertising.

Woman home

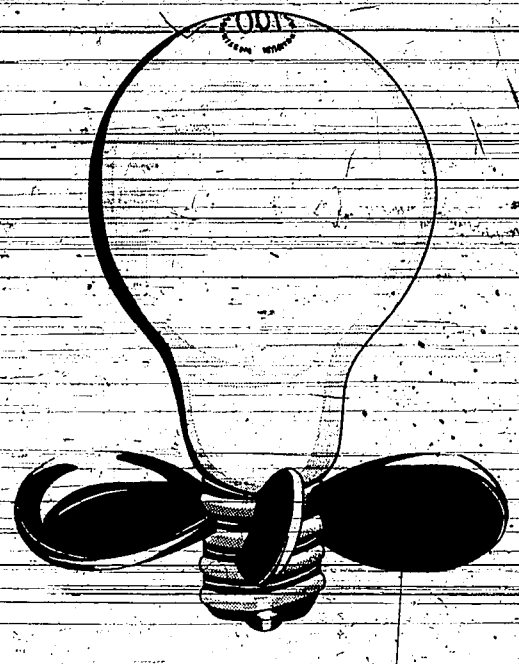

BOISE (UPI) — A Boise woman who went for a walk last Wednesday and never returned home has been found by Boise police.

Mary Trbovich, 83, had been spotted in downtown Boise Sunday, but the man who saw her didn't report it until Monday.

However, police received a second report Monday evening that Trbovich was down near the river in Boise and just before 7 p.m. they picked her up near 9th and Shoreline and took her home.

Bulb Turbines
They'll help.

But they can't solve all your energy problems.

Bulb turbines are simply another form of "low-head" hydroelectric generation.

Like other potential low-head hydro projects, they're going to contribute to your power supply. But combined, all these hydroelectric developments can meet only a part of future power needs.

Idaho Power has operated low-head hydro plants for years. A low-head plant doesn't require a high dam or large reservoir. It also doesn't produce that much electricity.

Depending on the site, bulb turbines may be more or less efficient than conventional turbines.

In recent months, Idaho Power has filed for water rights on a number of low-head projects, including projects that would use bulb and conventional turbines. On paper, these appear to provide a sizeable amount of electricity. But in reality, because of limitations in water supply, their actual generation will provide energy approximately equal to only one year's load growth.

We're in favor of practical low-head hydro. But these problems must be recognized:

- There just aren't enough available sites in southern Idaho where stream flows are adequate to produce power in significant quantities.
- Low-head projects of any type are extremely vulnerable to fluctuations in stream flows. In some cases, generation could fall from peak capacity to nearly zero in the space of only two or three months.
- Each plant requires separate installation of transmission facilities, substations, monitoring equipment, etc., increasing costs dramatically.
- The lead time is long. It probably will take two years to get permits to construct and two to three years of construction time for any project.
- Low-head hydro can be very expensive. The sites we've filed on will produce electricity at a price competitive with coal or nuclear plants. But power from other sites we've investigated would cost more — up to twice the cost of coal-produced electricity.

Jazz festival to salute Vaughan

SARAH VAUGHAN

By United Press International

NEWPORT NEWS

Saxophonist Ornette Coleman and pianist Billy Taylor joined such jazz artists as Lionel Hampton in New York Monday to announce the lineup of the 1978 Newport Jazz Festival. The 25th anniversary program begins on June 23 with a salute to Sarah "Sassy" Vaughan. Festival sponsor George Wein scotches reports that the festival — originally held in Newport, R.I. — was planning to move out of the Big Apple this year. "We could never leave the city that easily!"

GOOD GUYS AXED

There go Lee Majors, Robert Blake and Abe Vigoda. The "Six Million Dollar Man" is being recalled. "Baretta" has been busted. "Fish" has been thrown back. That was the sign from the new ABC-TV network television schedule for next year being passed around in Hollywood. The network said 84 percent of this year's series will be back next fall, but those three won't. The replacements: More science-fiction — both drama and comedy — the wave of the future since the success of the movies "Star Wars" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

Good samaritan loses his leg

DETROIT (UPI) — The city's next treasurer wonders if his attempt to help a woman motorist who appeared to be in trouble was worth it. The price was high — his right leg.

"It's mind blowing, just mind blowing," said Stanley Gruszkowski, 48, in Ford Hospital for amputation of his leg today.

Gruszkowski was running to the aid of another motorist on the Jeffries expressway three weeks ago when he was hit by a passing car. He was thrown over a median and into an oncoming lane of traffic. Luckily, he wasn't struck a second time but the accident left him with serious pelvic and leg injuries, including severed arteries.

As it turned out the motorist running to assist was not injured.

Her car apparently had struck the median and was teetering on top of it when Gruszkowski pulled his car over to the side of the highway.

That's the irony of all this," he said. "I'd seen her and slowed down along with another woman ahead of me and I thought I could do something. But I'm the one who needed the help."

He said he finds it difficult to accept the loss of his leg "for nothing."

"If I'd accomplished something, it might be easier," he said. "But, there was no rhyme, no reason for this to have happened. Bitter? If you can give me something to be bitter at, I would be. I haven't made up my mind who to be angry at or even whether to be angry at all."

Gruszkowski, who has been a member of the city's Board of Assessors for six years, is Mayor Coleman Young's choice for the treasurer's job, which under the new city charter, becomes an appointed position on July 1. He will replace Ronald C. Williams, who had been appointed to fill a vacancy.

Couple's names drawn separately

SPOKANE (UPI) — A Spokane couple's names were the first two names drawn from a 50 gallon drum containing the names of 13,000 people wishing to attend Friday's town hall meeting with President Jimmy Carter.

A seven year old girl drew the names and Mayor Ron Bair read them off. Ann Gorseth was first. The little girl drew another name and it was Mrs. Gorseth's husband, Peter.

"I had said I wouldn't go if he couldn't go, too," said a delighted Mrs. Gorseth.

A total of 1,700 names were drawn. The winners will be able to sit in the Spokane Opera house for about an hour and a half and listen and talk with the president.

Carter will be completing his last stop of a three-day western tour when he arrives in Spokane Friday about 11:30.

He will rededicate Riverfront Park and then attend the town meeting in the Opera House in the park.

The park rededication comes four years after Expo '74. The park was transformed by citizen money and central business district support, first from an old railroad yard into a world's fair site and finally into into a 110 acre park.

Prosecutor gives summation

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The prosecutor presenting his final argument in the murder trial of two American Indian Movement members, Monday urged jurists to consider the total evidence against the two and ignore the apparent inconsistencies in the prosecution's case.

"The greatest value of a jury is that it can apply its collective common sense to arrive at the truth," deputy district attorney Louis Samonsky said, adding that the combination of direct and circumstantial evidence "weaved a picture of guilt" against Paul Skyhorse, 31, and Richard Mohawk, 27.

Samonsky, of Ventura County, has been prosecuting the case in Los Angeles Superior Court since the trial, now in its 13th month, was moved on a change of venue.

Samonsky said the evidence, when taken in total, will show the defendants are guilty in the slaying of cab driver George Aird on Oct. 10, 1974.

The trial began April 12, 1977, after more than three years of pretrial motions.

The case was expected to go to the jury of seven women and five men today or Wednesday.

In the defense's summation last week, attorney Franklin Glenn said there were no believable facts linking Skyhorse and Mohawk to the Aird's slaying at an abandoned AIM camp in Ventura County.

Glenn said the prosecution's case was tainted in that three persons who may have been involved in the killing were granted immunity in exchange for their testimony against the two defendants.

Pretrial hearing scheduled for Judy

SANTA MONICA (UPI) — Entertainer Judy Carne, the "sock-it-to-me" girl of the old "Laugh-In" television series, pleaded innocent Monday to charges of possessing marijuana and amphetamine pills.

A pretrial hearing was scheduled for May 15 on the charges, brought after her third arrest on narcotics charges in recent months.

Miss Carne, who was in London, was represented by her attorney.

The 38-year-old entertainer was arrested with her ex-husband, Robert A. Bergman, Feb. 18 by Santa Monica police who at first thought they were driving a stolen car.

The car theft charge was later dropped and Miss Carne, now a resident of New York City, has filed a claim against the city of Santa Monica for $176,000, charging she was illegally arrested for auto theft.

Bergman, 31, was accused of possessing codeine and Miss Carne has blamed him for the presence of drugs in his car.

Bergman, who is currently in Pennsylvania, said through his attorney he would ask that the his drug possession charge be dismissed at the May 15 hearing.

Allergenic problems

The treatment of allergenic problems in the infant to three years of age presents a challenge to both the physician and parent. For treatment to be successful, the parents must be highly motivated and well educated about their child's condition. Symptoms of hypersensitivity in the infant includes a broad spectrum. Skin testing for specific allergens has not been useful in a child under three years of age. The physician must rely on family history, parent's presentation of symptoms and his repeated examinations of the child.

Almost any infant with significant allergies has a parent that has had similar problems when he was younger. The astute physician should question the parents regarding their past medical history whenever confronted by a child with potentially allergic symptoms.

Dr. Randy Slickers

The classic hypersensitive infant has dry scaly patches of eczema on his arm and behind his knees. He has dark circles under his eyes that have been termed "allergic shiners." He may also have a little turned up nose from constant wiping. The nose has been appropriately called the "allergic salute." This child might wheeze a great deal with exercise or every common cold. He tends to have constipation alternating with diarrhea. The mother may notice that the infant is congested after every formula or milk feeding. This patient is seen on almost a monthly basis for repeated upper respiratory infections, tonsillitis or ear infections. The most severely affected are hospitalized on occasion to control the symptoms. Most children are not as severe as the one described. Usually one or more of the symptoms is present.

Symptoms arising in the first three years of life have a 50 percent chance of disappearing as the child ages. The other 50 percent of the patients will require further therapeutic modalities. Skin problems, constantly runny noses and wheezing are all improved if the parents can be convinced to humidify the house. Expensive air purification systems are not needed but the addition of a humidifier to a furnace is of great benefit, especially in this dry climate.

Children even presumed to have some allergic problems, avoidance of common allergens is first line defense. A mother who is aware of allergies in her own past history or her husband's is encouraged to breast feed. Mother's milk is the least upsetting to an infant with milk intolerance. Even in the normal individual, diarrhea often accompanies respiratory infection. More and more physicians are encouraging mothers to stop milk products for several days at the first sign of diarrhea. Milk does prolong nearly any diarrhea. Goat's milk is occasionally recommended for toddlers unable to tolerate evey soy preparations. Folic acid must be replaced if goat's milk is used.

Numerous avoidance diets and suggestions for allergy proofing a house become cumbersome. More simple measures such as avoiding milk, humidification, keeping the pet outdoors, not carpeting the child's room and the use of foam pillows and synthetic blankets go a long way in treating allergies.

First line prescription drugs are bronchodilators and antihistamines. Bronchodilators such as Aminophyllin and Theophyllin tend to upset stomachs. The biggest problem faced by the physician is convincing the parents to use adequate dosages. After the child has vomited a half hour after ingesting the medicine, it becomes somewhat difficult convincing the parents to use it again. The child may not vomit again once the proper dosage is established. Antihistamines tend to be sedating, but this side effect tends to alleviate itself.

The new use of topical steroids for wheezing is not accompanied by the well publicized potential hazards in taking cortisone orally. Cortisone creams are a great benefit in treating skin problems and is relatively safe.

Although occasionally of benefit, tonsillectomy and adenoidectomy have no real affect on allergic problems. Use of this operation should be reserved for recurrent tonsillitis and/or middle-ear problems.

Allergic children are basically healthy individuals. Fifty percent resolve without lingering allergic symptoms. The severity of symptoms or frequency of required office visits do tend to make them special children; special, at least, to their parents. A parent must be on his guard to avoid adding psychiatric overtones to allergy troubles. Even young children have been known to manipulate their parents by "turning on and off again" allergic symptoms. The child must be treated properly but without undue concern. With proper therapy the allergic child need not be severely handicapped.

High fashion

Clothes encounters of the worst kind

By MR. BLACKWELL
©Field Enterprises Inc.

Contrary to popular belief, the jet-setting pace of today has nothing to do with fashion or trends in clothes. What we have today are different statements of fashion, predicated on past fashion performance.

The '70s have borrowed fashion from all periods of time and presented it to the public in cartoon form. The word is that clothes will be more feminine, but that needn't mean frills, ruffles and garden-party collage. It will boil down to each woman having to interpret from her own viewpoint.

From where I sit, being feminine means to be female. Only a small part of today's clothes are feminine. I see a large part of grossly heavy covers, which hide true feminine feelings. The only saving grace for this particular period is the sometimes bias cut of the garments.

More oversized, poorly constructed clothes were produced last year than any other year I can remember. To cover for a lack of creativity, the garment has been made much larger than necessary for any given size.

FASHION '78: FUN, OVERDONE.

Fashion today is also slightly dead, extremely lacking and, for the most part, grossly overdone. Today's women know what they want in fashion, yet feel they've been let down. The average woman of 35 and over claims she can't find fashion today. This is not true. She can find it if she'll seek it out in specialty stores that cater more to the individual than to seasonal concepts: among them, Nan Duskin, Philadelphia; Martha's, New York City; Giorgio's, Los Angeles and Lily Rubin, with stores in 15 or 20 cities across the country.

Young people, of course, should experiment with new art, new fashions, new anything. We cannot dictate a flat decision to our youth. Not yesterday, not today, not ever. They have to experience and experiment and then choose where they want to go. It would be cruel of the Establishment to lay a heavy hand of rule and law on youth.

We have as great a need today to "dress up" and for dress-up fashions as we ever had. What we lack is the incentive to do so. The industry has spent years — far too many — convincing the American people it was obscene to look "rich." I mean, the "garbage-can look" was part of Betsey Johnson's first statement.

Now, Sandra Rhodes shows the "beggar look," with safety pins holding torn dresses. For some strange reason, several of the new designers feel it's rude to look as if you have independent taste or wealth. They should be the ones leading us away from that outdated attitude.

ABOUT SEX OBJECTS —

The women's movement has done nothing for fashion. Mostly, it has proven merely that women want to be women. All this nonsense about being a sex object for men! Don't let a man do this ... don't let a man do that. It's stupid.

What happened out of women's rights was that the whole thing reversed itself. Instead of women being admired by men as sexy, the women are now sitting back and taking that same position about men who look a lot more fashionable.

Nothing exemplified this more than television producer Norman Lear's short series, All That Glitters, which put the man on the fashion pedestal and women into corporate offices. The old story about a man going out for the evening and "making out" doesn't hold anymore. Today a man goes out and his big claim to fame is that SHE didn't make out.

Men have picked up the ball in being "well-dressed" and "fashionable," or "sexy." Their clothes fit better than women's. They're taking more pride in what they wear; more colors have been added and men aren't afraid to wear jewelry anymore. Importantly, they're a lot more selective in their smart styles than most of the women today.

Whereas men have made this great transition, women have been goaded into a complete role of reversal. I don't think either fashion or women are ready for this — nor will they ever be.

There has been this dramatic and sudden transition from the micro miniskirts to the midi — and even floor-length granny gowns. The American woman is in such a state of shock over it all that I predict the longer lengths will be around for a good while.

We are stuck with length. The only thing the woman can do if she's inventive, is to take shears in hand and start whacking away until satisfied.

A TOSSED SALAD

The current fashion situation is like a tossed salad in a mixing bowl. Women haven't been buying wardrobes; they've purchased odd items, some just not for them. Women ran back to pants and man-tailored shirts. That's not the way the industry should have gone.

I'm not against trends that seem to be forming the future of fashion. I do have some great reservations, however. I hope that fashion does not become so boring and understated as to go back to dull grays and blacks; with everybody looking the same.

FUTURE LOOKS BRIGHT

Fashion has a great future if the young designers of today will take a piece of what we knew, a lot of what they know, and go from there. There is no future for the traditionalists alone because that would be too dull. There is no future for the outrageous because outrageous has had its day.

Hopefully, the young designers will benefit from some of our traditional experiences from the past in fashion's past — applying it to all their free, loose casual concepts.

Softer fabrics are more in vogue; they will never be out. Hard fabrics, such as fiberings and stiff linens will never be used for the average public. Otherwise, clothes would look like 1960, and we would only be going backward.

The big danger with the fashion pendulum is that, as in all things, it will swing too fast, too far, if someone doesn't apply the brakes in time. Designers like myself, who are considered traditionalists — people who have designed for femininity rather than flare (which is a great part of current fashion) — need to merge with some of the fascinating young designers such as Bob Mackie, Hal Davis and Holly Harp who have much to offer and lack only the velvet touch of the more mature couturier.

LIKE FAMILY

Some of the tradition and heritage should be passed on. Fashion, after all, is like family, but at the same time, individuality will stand out. If we do this, new concepts will fit, not just cover up. More emphasis will be placed on clothes that are fashionable for specific occasions.

At great black-tie affairs, the clothes look more like the glamor of the '40s ... maybe tomorrow will bring back the concept. The young and able designers would be wise to apply some of the construction concepts of those of us who have gone before. Neither of us, nor sensible fashion, will survive unless this happens.

BOSOMS ARE BACK

I suspect bosoms will be a focal point in the future evening look. You'll find it in stretch bras and undergarments, which are just beginning to come back into the fashion limelight. There was a period when nobody sold a decently coordinated group of undergarments for women. Evidently, the industry realizes now that it cannot ignore the people who provide substantially the basics of dressing. Without the proper undergarments, there's no way you can dress anyone completely.

The nude look is just that — nude. Bare is fine in the right perspective, but the nude look won't do for most women.

Philosophically, there is a new generation coming up that seems to have a more conservative attitude about everything. If the fashion experts, the designers, the industry papers, the garment industry aren't careful, they will be abandoned, and the home sewing machine will be back in vogue.

The woman who wants a future in fashionable attire ideally should have her own fashion consultant. Unfortunately, too many designers running around today are ego maniacs. They have little concern for you, but a lot of concern that, when you walk out of a shop, you become a hanger for their whole statement.

SUIT YOURSELF

In the final analysis you, the woman, are the one who wears our creations. Come out of the closet and demand the fashion that's right for you. Don't be afraid to pick and choose and get opinions. Never stand in front of a mirror and say, "Well, I guess I'll take this one," when in your mind you are saying, "I hate it, but I haven't got all day."

Coordinate your fashion to suit your individuality. Don't be afraid to look to the future. It's all right to have one foot in the past, but don't anchor yourself there forever. Think of it as basic training for the future, because that is where your particular "new" look is.

As for myself, I am not prepared to go on in my present capacity for more than two or three more years. I could kick myself upstairs and become a "private couturier."

The older we get, the more safety we seek in our smaller words. Yet, and at best, a designer is good for no more than 25 years.

The younger people have their concepts. Theirs is the future of fashion, and I believe in that future. The American woman can insist that it be great ... but will she?

Home economics students hold play school

High school students enjoy classes on child development

TONY HAYES GIVES IT THE OLD COLLEGE TRY
... glues piece on his art work

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls High School home economics students have been holding a play school, but the play was only for the children they brought.

It was serious business for the students who brought their younger brothers and sisters or friends from 2 to 5 years of age for the past two weeks.

The project climaxed a 12-week study of the development of children from conception and birth to 6 years of age, according to Marya Duncan, teacher.

She said many community resources were involved in the study, with speakers from foster homes, adoption agencies and child abuse, as well as clergymen discussing marriage counseling.

Students also spent time observing in various child care centers, including the BoPeep Nursery. Children's Village and the Easter Seal Center. They also will visit the library and Child Development Center, Duncan said.

The play school was divided into four areas — active play with toys, table work which included coloring, painting and puzzles; music and hand play and a story time. Students made all the material used in the sessions.

The teacher said the play school lasted over two class periods, each divided into two activities. Students served on committees for each of the activities during the eight days of the project.

Child development is a popular class at the high school, Duncan said, with full enrollment each semester. Students learn to understnad children, prepare to be good parents and become aware of the many occupations, besides that of homemaker, involved in working with children.

Youths planning to go into nursing, speech therapy, psychology, sociology or any area of child care such as day nursery schools, kindergarten or play schools would benefit from the course, Duncan said.

Abby

Mother is childish

DEAR ABBY: If my feelings are childish and unjustified, please let me have it. I am dreading Mother's Day for the following reason: My only child (a daughter, now married) has always been very close to an aunt who has never married. I think it's lovely of my daughter to remember this aunt with a gift at Christmastime, but when she gives her a gift on Mother's Day with a card which says, "You've been like a mother to me," I resent it.

I once told my daughter that I was hurt to have to share that special day with someone else, and she said, "So what? I only gave her a box of candy!"

Abby, it doesn't matter what the gift was, I am her mother and her aunt is not. What do you think?

HURTING

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR HURTING: Although your feelings of resentment are understandable, try to empathize with one who will never know the joys of motherhood; don't begrudge her one small thrill once a year.

DEAR ABBY: First I read the letter signed, 36 AND STILL A VIRGIN, and then the one from 60 AND STILL A VIRGIN, which moves me to suggest this epitaph for both:

"Here lies the hymen
Of Betty Jones
For her life held no terrors.
A virgin born
A virgin died
No hits, no runs, no errors."

CARL IN MURRYSVILLE, PA.

DEAR ABBY: We were three girls brought up in a strictly Jewish home, so we never had ham, bacon or pork in our house. Now that we are all grown up and married, none of us observes the dietary customs, but our parents still do.

My oldest sister has a beautiful home, and when she has mama and papa over, she serves them a dairy dinner, but she always puts a big pork roast on the table for everyone else.

Mama and papa have never said anything, but I know they are hurt.

I once told my sister I thought she was out of line to put pork on the table with the folks here; and she said, "We have pork in this house, and they know it, so why be a hypocrite? Besides, in MY home I'll serve whatever I like."

I still think my sister is wrong. Or am I?

BEA IN THE BRONX

DEAR BEA: Your sister is not only wrong, she's childish, disrespectful and mean. She's trying to show contempt for the old traditions and at the same time let mama and papa know that she's her own boss now and can do as she pleases. (It's true that she can, but she doesn't have to hit them over the head with a pork roast to make her point.)

Gooding High pupil merit award winner

GOODING — Brett A. Clifford of Gooding was one of the five Idaho winners in the National Merit Scholarship Corp. competition.

Clifford, who will receive $1,000 from NMSC, was one of 14,000 considered nationwide. A committee comprised of college admissions officers and secondary school counselors then judged him as a finalist and a junior part of his selection was based on outstanding abilities and accomplishments.

Unlike most scholarships, financial need was not taken into account. Winners are awarded $1,000 scholarships not only based on abilities and accomplishments, but on high scores from the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test.

The Sun Company, Inc., a firm specializing in research and marketing for energy and petrochemical products, sponsored Clifford's scholarship award.

Clifford, a Gooding High School senior, is president of the school's National Honor Society chapter, lettered in varsity football, and is a member of the Spanish club. He was named valedictorian and was a delegate to the American Legion Gem Boys State. Clifford's field of study is biology.

Sometimes the standard expert play turns out to be a loser. Today's slam hand is a good example of what can happen when the play that offers the best chance for success turns out to be a loser.

The six-spade contract is slightly optimistic, but the sort of contract that is reached all the time.

The expert declarer wins the heart in dummy, leads the nine of trumps and lets it ride. West is delighted to win the trick with his singleton queen of trumps. If his feeling of delight has not interfered with his reasoning powers and if East had been smart enough to play the deuce of hearts at trick one, West will shift to a club and South will be short one slam. If West fails to lead a club, South will be able to get rid of his clubs on dummy's diamonds.

The ordinary declarer wins the heart in his hand, cashes one high trump, drops the queen and makes all the tricks. But he has taken the wrong line of play.

The reason is that the expert loses to the singleton queen, but the average player would lose if West held the singleton 6, 5, 4 or 2.

Ask the Experts

A Mississippi reader wants to know if it is true that you should pick up a hand with 4-4-3-2 distribution over one fifth of the time.

Yes, it is true. You should have 4-4-1-2 distribution 21.55 percent of the time and 20 percent is a one-fifth chance.

Library hours will be 3 to 6 p.m. Monday, Friday and Saturday and from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday.

Two new members added to the library board are Mrs. Dorothy Fischer and Ardean Lang.

Opening

NEW YORK (UPI) — Prices opened lower tuesday in active trading of New York Stock Exchange issues.

The Dow Jones industrial average was off 0.85 point to 843.47 shortly after the opening. Declines led advanced, 228 to 222, among the 726 issues crossing the NYSE tape in the early going.

Many investors were disturbed by a New York Times report that the Council on Wage & Price Stability plang to use subpoena powers to obtain corporate records in the Carter administration's battle against inflation.

Investors have been reacting favorably to Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller's tough anti-inflation stance, namely his decision last week to tighten credit and force interest rates higher.

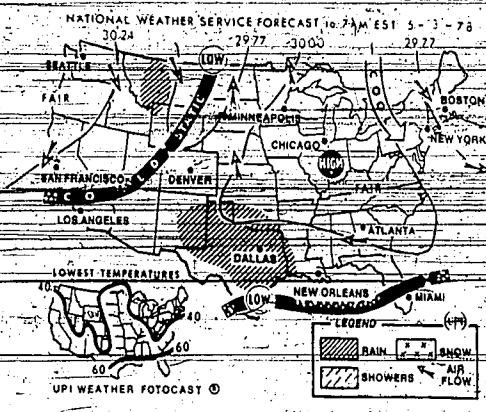

Traders shrugged off the fact that several banks raised their prime lending rate a quarter point to 8¾ percent, the highest level since Feb. 18, 1975.

New National Smoker Study:

Merit Taste Matches High Tar Competition!

High tar smokers report low tar MERIT delivers flavor of leading high tar brands.

Can low tar MERIT with 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco measure up to the flavor delivery of high tar cigarettes?

Read the research results of a new national smoker study conducted with high tar smokers—smokers like yourself—who taste-tested MERIT against leading high tar brands.

Results Endorse MERIT Breakthrough

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers rate MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading high tar cigarettes tested! Cigarettes having up to twice the tar.

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers confirm taste satisfaction of low tar MERIT.

Detailed interviews were also conducted with current MERIT smokers.

Confirmed: 85% of MERIT smokers say it was an "easy switch" from high tar brands.

Confirmed: Overwhelming majority of MERIT smokers say their former high tar brands weren't missed!

Confirmed: 9 out of 10 MERIT smokers not considering other brands.

First Major Alternative To High Tar Smoking

MERIT has proven conclusively that it not only delivers the flavor of high tar brands but continues to satisfy!

This ability to satisfy over long periods of time could be the most important evidence to date that MERIT is what it claims to be: The first major alternative to high tar smoking.

Balloon power

Filer farmer finds balloon released by California kids

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

FILER — It didn't quite go around the world in 80 days, but 450 miles for a dime store helium balloon carrying a postcard is an air mail record even the Postal Service might envy.

Admittedly, delivery times and points of destination were a bit uncertain. But the 399 students at California's Ready Springs Union School, in Rough and Ready, Calif., (about 45 miles northeast of Sacramento as the balloon flies) knew their airborne messages would end up somewhere. So on April 5, they sent 399 multicolored balloons — each trailing a postcard on a string — lofting into a slightly overcast sky.

Two weeks later Filer farmer Rex Reed was repairing a fence in his bean field. Tangled in the brush beside his irrigation ditch was one of the balloons, offering only a postcard addressed to Rough and Ready, Calif., as a key to its identity.

"I didn't know where it had come from," Reed said. "That's why I sent back the postcard. I was pretty curious."

Reed didn't have a lengthy wait before his curiosity was satisfied. Almost immediately he received 25 pencil printed letters from Mrs. Margaret Eli's second grade class. Those letters, arriving by the more mundane delivery methods of the United States Postal Service, informed Reed his balloon had been released by 7-year-old Kimberly Stack, as part of the school's "Kite Day" spring celebration.

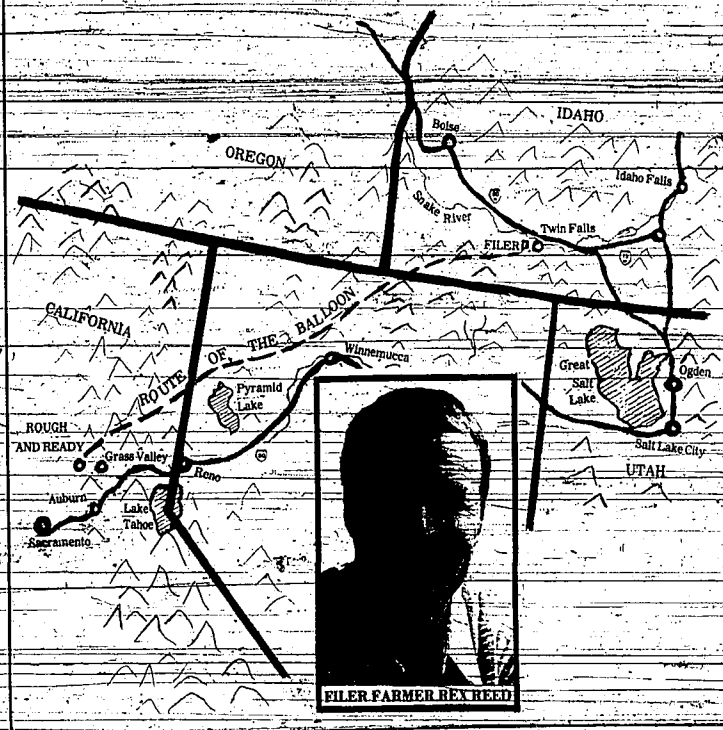

Those letters also informed Reed he held the distance record not just for the class but for the entire eight grades of the Ready Springs School.

Contacted by the Times-News, Mrs. Eli said every student got up a balloon with an attached postcard. "We were interested when they would end up. So far the one from Mr. Reed and one that landed in Lovelock, Nev., have gone the farthest."

A map has been posted in the tiny local library (Rough and Ready lists a population of just 471 persons, Mrs. Eli said,) and is now punctuated with colored pins marking sites where balloons have descended.

But while the balloon which grounded in Reed's bean field apparently flew through the air with the greatest of ease, not all were so fortunate. "We've only got six back so far," Mrs. Eli said. "A lot are probably up in the snow some place and won't be found until spring. But if this one could make it over the mountains, who knows where they could be?"

Officially, the Postal Service may have discontinued air mail letter delivery. But unofficially it's alive and well in Rough and Ready, Calif.

FILER FARMER REX REED

Dear Mr Reed
Everyone in our school sent a balloon up with a postcard like Kimberly's. We wanted to see how far they would go. So for yours is the farthest. Sincerely
2nd Grade Class

Last chance sewage talk today

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The City of Twin Falls and the designers of the city sewage treatment plant scheduled a "last chance" meeting today to discuss, again, how to get the city sewage treatment plant functioning properly.

In a meeting last month between the City Council and representatives of Hamilton and Voeller, Inc., the designers of the plant, and Envirotech, Inc., one of the principal equipment suppliers for the plant, today's meeting was arranged in an effort to bury finger-pointing and buck-passing and to develop an effective operating program for the city's malfunctioning sewage plant.

Twin Falls Mayor Leon Smith called today's meeting the "last chance" to solve the problems at the plant through cooperation. If today's meeting is a failure, Smith predicted, the city may be forced into "withdrawing into our shell, slugging it out in court and hiring an outside consultant to come in and operate the plant."

Smith said Monday the inability of the various parties to agree on ground rules for the meeting almost cancelled the meeting.

First, he said, plant designer Jack Hammond of Hamilton and Voeller, Inc., said city officials failed to submit their operating recommendations for the plant to him prior to April 20, as promised.

City officials, however, had been under the impression that Hammond had requested only information relating to design deficiencies the city had identified in the plant, Smith said.

The city's operating recommendations were finally read to Hammond over the telephone near the end of last week, Smith told the council.

Then there was the disagreement between Envirotech and Neptune Microfloc, both equipment suppliers for the plant.

Neptune Microfloc agreed to attend the meeting only if no attorneys for any of the parties were present, but Twin Falls attorney Lloyd Walker insisted he would attend as Envirotech's representative, Smith said.

Smith said he finally convinced Envirotech to send an engineer to the meeting instead of Walker, and Microfloc consented to attend, fortunately, for Hammond had said the presence of both Envirotech and Microfloc was necessary to develop a workable program for the plant.

Unfortunately, the most substantial differences of opinion remain to be worked out.

According to Idaho Department of Health and Welfare (DHW) environmentalist Ian Von Lindern, who will attend the meeting as the DHW's representative, the plant is presently unable to handle the volume of suspended solids entering it.

Because the vacuum filter (supplied by Envirotech) is not functioning, the plant is producing a much greater volume of material which must be hauled away for disposal than the city can handle with present trucking equipment, Von Lindern said. The vacuum filter is designed to reduce the volume of such material by reducing its liquid content.

As a result, sludge is collecting in several areas of the plant, reducing the efficiency of those units, he explained.

But the volume of material which must be hauled away can not be reduced until all units of the plant function properly, and the plant cannot function properly until the volume of accumulated sludge is reduced.

Von Lindern said the only way out of the circle is to "have all facilities on line," including the vacuum filter.

But Envirotech has repeatedly refused to supply on warranty an essential part of the filter because the city has already gone through four of the parts in two years.

Envirotech claims the parts have been ruined due to poor operation and maintenance, while the city claims the parts have never properly fit the filter and thus should be replaced without charge. So the unit has remained inoperative.

Johnny Horizon meeting

TWIN FALLS — Volunteers who will be participating in the annual Johnny Horizon Day Saturday are asked to attend the final planning meeting at 8 p.m. tonight in the Twin Falls County Judicial Building.

William L. Chancey, general chairman of the event, said assignments will be made tonight and the committee will hand out supplies and other information.

Organizations and individuals who have assisted in previous Johnny Horizon events will be able to work in the same areas as in the past if they contact Chancey or attend the planning meeting.

Workers may go directly to their assigned areas Saturday morning or meet at 8 a.m. at the old hospital for transportation to clean-up areas.

A free picnic will be served at noon Saturday at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds at Filer for all volunteers.

New brass for band

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Municipal Band has elected a new director and officers.

Ted Hadley, junior high school instrumental music director, will direct the group, which is one of the very few city bands still functioning in the country.

Jim Willis is president; Gordon Cox is vice president; Judee Golay, secretary-treasurer, and Wayne Ford, business manager. Trustees include Allen Desries and Tom Breske.

First practice of the season will be held May 9 at 8 p.m. in the bandshall basement. The opening concert of the weekly summer series is scheduled for June 8 at 8:15 p.m.

Jerome inspector sought

JEROME — The city of Jerome and Jerome County are seeking a replacement for their building inspector, Mark Servatius, who resigned effective Friday.

County commissioners and Jerome Mayor Marshall Everheart met Monday and agreed to retain the practice of hiring a building inspector jointly.

Servatius, who had been building inspector since November, 1976, resigned to take a job in Ontario, Oregon.

Commissioner Mel Grindstaff said the city and county want a "good carpenter or builder with experience" for the job.

Maps show Ketchum boundaries fuzzy

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

KETCHUM — Ketchum may be bigger and smaller than city officials previously believed it was.

This past fall Ketchum officials discovered the city's maps of Ketchum's boundaries did not agree with state maps delineating city boundaries.

It may be that areas previously believed in the city are not legally part of Ketchum and other areas thought to lie outside city limits are in fact within the city.

Ketchum city planner Russ Pinto told the Ketchum city council Monday that in the fall the state tax commission asked Ketchum to examine tax commission maps delineating the city's boundaries for tax purposes.

Pinto said he discovered that the state and city maps disagreed on several areas, making Ketchum bigger in some sections and smaller in others than Ketchum officials had thought.

The city had a sneaking suspicion the state is right and the city maps are incorrect.

As Ketchum city administrator James Jacquet observed: "We suspect as the city was annexing in the past, they annexed by inaccurate legal descriptions. They thought they were including areas and they were not."

Jacquet said Ketchum city attorney will soon meet with the state tax commission to discuss the matter but the city administrator admitted: "We've kind of got a hunch that they may be correct because we might not have properly researched it when we were annexing."

Pinto said the discrepancies occurred around 1965-66 when a series of major annexations and de-annexations occurred in Ketchum. He said the errors occurred because of poor draftsmen using inaccurate legal descriptions.

"I'm amazed it has taken this long to come to light," Pinto observed.

Air service 30 years old today

By LORAYNE O. SMITH

TWIN FALLS — Thirty years ago today the first interstate air flight began in Twin Falls by Empire Airlines, forerunner of the present Hughes Airwest.

In conjunction with the historic flight, Twin Falls city officials dedicated the city airport as Joslin Field, in honor of S/Sgt. Raymond Joslin, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Joslin, Filer, who lost his life in World War II.

According to Hughes Airwest information, during the first full year of Empire's interstate service through Twin Falls in 1949, about 2,100 Magic Valley travelers used the line. Twenty years later, in 1969, local boardings had jumped 880 per cent to more than 20,000.

Nearly 44,200 passengers boarded flights at Joslin Field last year, down slightly from 1976's record of 46,400. The drop was due to adverse weather conditions.

No public observation is scheduled today, but the 30th anniversary will be celebrated with a banquet for airline and civic representatives tonight at the Holiday Inn. O.A. "Gus" Kelker will be master of ceremonies for the banquet program.

Harry Merrick, airport manager, said Airport Day, in honor of the same anniversary, is scheduled for May 20.

Ethics code: hit-and-miss enforcement

"I think if the members of this body were to take the vows of poverty, abolish our offices, abandon our homes and pitch pup tents on the Capitol lawn, we'd still be criticized for something — maybe for walking on the grass."
— House Democratic Leader Jim Wright, 1977

By DAVID MORRISSEY

(Part three of a series)

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Few pieces of major legislation please everyone.

And, despite the near record votes of approval for the 1977 Senate and House of Representatives ethics codes, more than a few lawmakers still grumble about sections of those codes they feel are unworkable or unfair.

More than a few also agree with Congressman Wright, that no matter how hard they try, as politicians they'll be tarred with a wide brush for some time to come.

Those codes take effect this month, and Idaho Congressmen and Senators are among those skeptical about their operation. Opinions in the four-man Idaho delegation range from near opposition to the codes, to criticism of only certain parts of the ethics requirements.

Basically, the new codes, passed largely to satisfy voters that scandals of Watergate, pay-offs and sexual impropriety were things of the past, focus on five major areas:

•Widened Financial Disclosure. Legislators will now have to reveal most debts and investments. In addition similar itemization will be required for key staff members as well as spouses of Congressmen and Senators.

•Limited Outside Income. The new codes also slap tight restrictions on certain "outside earnings" of Senators and Congressman, such as fees from speaking engagements and published articles. In the past these supplimental employments have been extremely profitable for some lawmakers.

•Additional gift restrictions. Members will now be required to report gifts of significance.

•Banning of Office Accounts. Office accounts, or "slush funds," as they were called by some, were unofficial private funds from which miscellaneous expenses were paid. Convinced these funds were too easily subject to misuse, Congress has banned office accounts altogether.

•Excessive Travel. Congress restricted the practice of defeated "lame duck" members taking trips at taxpayer expense between their November defeat and the January end of their term of office.

Idaho's Congressional delegation offered several specific objections to the new codes, with strongest opposition focusing on the outside earnings limitation.

Second District Congressmen George Hansen, a Republican, questioned the elimination of office accounts. Hansen noted there were times when office accounts served a legitimate purpose. Should he return to Idaho, Hansen pointed out, his trip from Washington, D.C. to Boise, would be paid by the government. But should he then wish to visit other Idaho cities to talk to constituents, those traveling expenses would come out of his own pocket. Banning office accounts knocks out one method by which the in-state travel might be financed, Hansen said.

Strong criticism of the limitation on outside earnings came from First District Congressman Steve Symms, also a Republican. Limiting a members outside earnings to a maximum of 15 per cent of his salary is "totally arbitrary," Symms said, and a significant step toward making the Senate a "rich mans club."

Symms noted the outside earnings limitation meant some of the poorer lawmakers had to refuse speaking engagements they would otherwise accept.

"Barbara Jordan is given many, many invitations," Symms noted. "With this limit she can't go, but a guy with a personal fortune of a million dollars can. There's no limit on his personal fortune or on the interest he's drawing." Symms said the limitation on outside earnings should be eliminated.

Fired assistant seeks Jerome County assessor's job

By LARRY SWISHER
Times-News writer

JEROME — James Coakley, the man who earlier this year accused Jerome County Assessor Howard Jepson of wrongdoing, will seek Jepson's job in this year's elections.

Coakley said today he has dropped the idea of a lawsuit against the county over being fired by Jepson and will challenge the Jerome County assessor for the Republican nomination.

It will be Coakley's first try at public office.

A Jerome realtor, William Kersey, is said to be considering running on the Democratic ticket.

A personal property appraiser in the assessor's office for two years until Jepson fired him when he made his accusations, Coakley said he has also dropped a lawsuit against his previous employer, the Internal Revenue Service. The lawsuit had claimed he was wrongly fired from the Twin Falls IRS office in 1974 and sought reinstatement and back pay.

Coakley, 43, a six-year resident of Jerome, said he has notified the U.S. attorney he will drop the suit.

"It's the kind of suit that could be tied up in court for years," he said. "I want to devote full time to seeking the county assessor's job."

He said his main goal, if elected, would be to "correct the inequities in the tax burden that each individual is having to carry."

"There's got to be revaluation and eradication of personal favoritism," he said. "I don't think it's either sound or wise to name names, for the simple reason that it just creates a hornet's nest. My idea is to do a total job and attempt to get equality to all taxpayers."

Coakley charged Jepson has not started a revaluation plan since taking office in 1968 and that homes built since then are overtaxed.

He charged Jepson assessed new homes built from 1970-74 at 100 percent of market value and from 1975 to the present at 80 percent, while older homes, including Jepson's, are assessed at a lower percentage of market value.

Coakley said he would ask the county commissioners to fund a revaluation program by hiring more assessor's office employees or assuddenly fire.

"Inflation is naturally the big bandit; all the older homes have not been reappraised to bring them to what their true market value is," he said.

About the commissioners handling of his charges of malefeasance against Jepson for underassessing the personal property taxes of Moore Business Forms and Tupperware, Coakley said he is satisfied.

"I think they fulfilled their responsibilities," he said. "I disagree with them because they wouldn't admit the assessor was at least grossly negligent, but that's a moot point. I got the results I wanted. The county got $28,000 it didn't have before and the two accounts are straightened out for the future."

The commissioners refused to reinstate Coakley to his appraiser's job last month, although he had threatened to initiate a lawsuit.

But Coakley said he feels no personal animosity toward the

Lawmakers grumble about codes

Criticism of the limitation on outside earnings also came from Idaho's two senators, Republican James McClure and Democrat Frank Church. Both called the restriction arbitrary in that it applied only to certain kinds of outside earned income.

"It's pure sophistry and hypocrisy to enact a code that uneven in application," McClure said. McClure noted that in the past he had used his earnings from speaking engagements to pay for unexpected staff expenses," such as plane tickets for staff members to attend important conferences. Those expenses aren't covered by official salaries, McClure noted. The speaking engagements funds were frequently the only way his office could afford to send staff members to certain meetings, McClure added. With the limitation on outside earned income, there might not be a source to pay for those expenses, McClure said.

Church also criticized the limitation, adding he would support lifting the restrictions unless they were applied equally to all senators. "By placing the restrictions only on earned income, and not on income from interest payments, rents, trusts, stock dividends and the like," Church said, "we're merely encouraging the trend toward a Senate which is filled in favor of the wealthy."

Idaho's four representatives were generally supportive of the new limitations on the franking privilege.

Hansen, McClure and Church also said they supported requiring at least general disclosure of a lawmaker's financial status. Symms, however, criticized even disclosure, saying "it won't make Congress any better," and adding the only effect of the new codes would be to make it harder to find persons willing to run for office.

Idaho's lawmakers weren't the only politicians upset with the new ethics codes. Many senators and representatives have criticized disclosure and the limitation on outside earnings for going too far. But at least some legislators blasted the codes for not going far enough, and said they would carry on the fight to extend the ethics requirements.

Campbell, Still first in NFL draft

NEW YORK (UPI) — Heisman Trophy winner Earl Campbell of Texas, the hard-running, high stepping halfback who led the nation in rushing and scoring last season, today was selected by the Houston Oilers to open the 1978 National Football League college player draft.

Houston obtained the first choice last week by dealing tight end Jimmy Giles and two draft choices over the next two years to Tampa Bay. The Oilers then made the 5-foot-11, 225-pound native of Tyler, Texas, only the second player from the University of Texas ever to be the No. 1 draft choice in the nation.

Middle linebacker Tommy Nobis of Atlanta was chosen by Atlanta in 1966. Kansas City, with major defensive problems, selected Art Still, the 6-7, 245-pound defensive tackle from Kentucky. Still was the first consensus All-America from Kentucky since Sam Ball in 1965 and was named Southeastern Conference Player of the Year. He was a finalist in the Lombardi and Heisman Trophy balloting and led the Wildcats in sacks with 22 for 58 yards in losses.

New Orleans, seeking to improve its offense, chose wide receiver Wes Chandler from the University of Florida. Chandler, who played both running back and receiver last season, caught 25 passes for 390 yards and six touchdowns in 1977. He also carried 61 times for 353 yards. Chandler has 67 catches for 1,454 yards and 16 TDs strictly as a receiver before last season.

The New York Jets, also looking for offensive help, made a tackle their No. 1 pick for the second straight year when they selected Chris Ward of Ohio State and Buffalo quickly followed by naming running back Terry Miller of Oklahoma State.

Ward, a 6-2, 275-pounder, was a three-year starter for the Buckeyes and was an All-American the past two seasons. Coach Woody Hayes called him the "best offensive lineman at Ohio State since John Hicks".

Miller, a 5-11, 190-pounder, was runnerup to Campbell in the Heisman Trophy balloting. He finished third in the nation in rushing in 1977, carrying 314 times for 1,680 yards and averaging 5.3 yards per carry. Miller averaged 152.7 yards per game and scored 14 TDs.

Green Bay named Stanford wide receiver Ken Lofton and San Francisco wasted no time in taking tight end Ken MacAfee of Notre Dame.

Lofton, a 6-3, 185-pounder, caught 53 passes for 931 yards and scored 12 TDs. He was named Most Valuable Player in the Senior Bowl and was a top college long jumper and sprinter. Lofton started only his senior year and had career totals of 72 catches for 1,295 yards and 18 TDs.

MacAfee, a 6-4, 250-pounder whose father once played for the New York Giants, finished third in the Heisman balloting and was named receiver of the year by the Downton Athletic Club and was the Walter Camp Foundation Player of the Year.

Cincinnati, on a choice obtained from Philadelphia, selected Notre Dame's Ross Browner. Browner, a 6-3, 250-pounder taken as a defensive end, was twice named UPI Lineman of the Year and was the Downtown Athletic Club's Lineman of the Year after finishing sixth in the Heisman balloting.

Seattle, with one of the most porous defenses in the NFL, took Keith Simpson, a cornerback from Memphis State. Simpson, a 6-1, 190-pounder, was called the best all-around athlete on the team by Memphis State coaches. Simpson set a school record with three interceptions in a game last season and most often preferred to throw away from him. He played in both the Blue-Gray and Senior Bowl games.

Cleveland named linebacker Clay Matthews of Southern California. Matthews, an outside linebacker, is a 6-2, 230-pounder who ranked third on the Trojans in tackles last season with 83.

The draft continued throughout the day and complete results were not available at press time but will be carried in tomorrow's Times-News.

Officials block Player's bid for British PGA

ATLANTA (UPI) — An officer of the Atlanta Golf Classic says he blocked Gary Player from playing in the British PGA because "we owed it to our sponsors and fans."

John Shea, president of the Atlanta Classic Foundation, said Player cannot be forced to play in the Atlanta Classic, scheduled the same weekend as the British PGA, but he can be prohibited from playing anywhere else.

Both tournaments are planned for the last weekend of this month. Player was committed to play in the Atlanta Classic but now wants to play in the British PGA.

PGA rules permit golfers to skip any tour stop they wish, as long as they don't play in a conflicting tournament elsewhere.

"I met with Gary this past weekend at New Orleans," said Shea. "I informed him the Atlanta Classic felt it was in its best interest as a sponsor and in the interest of Atlanta golf fans to deny him permission to play in the British PGA that weekend.

"Afterall, Gary is a very hot commodity right now," Shea said. "We'll have most of the top names, including Jack Nicklaus, but Gary has attracted a lot of attention the last few weeks."

"You have to draw the line somewhere," said Shea. "We let Gary and some of the others out last year and we feel if they are going to play anywhere that week, it should be for us."

Player recorded consecutive victories at the Masters, the Tournament of Champions and Houston Open before finishing in a tie for fifth Sunday at New Orleans. If he plays in Atlanta, it would mark the 11th consecutive week he has played in the United States.

"We understand the request of tour players on conflicting events such as this," said Shea. "It has been our policy to honor these requests one time as we did last year with Tom Watson, who was the 1977 Masters champion, Gene Littler and George Burns and Gary. We felt we owed it to our sponsors and our fans to deny them the releases this year."

Even though Player has been blocked from playing in the British PGA, he is still not forced to play in the Atlanta Classic. If he wishes, he can simply take a vacation the last week of this month.

"We congratulate Gary on his efforts to support the U.S. tour this year," said Shea. "Even though he is disappointed in our position, we thank him for being a gentleman in this discussion and for understanding our problem."

Sonics oust Blazers 105-95

SEATTLE (UPI) — Dennis Johnson tossed in 20 points to lead six Seattle players scoring in double figures Monday night as the SuperSonics eliminated the Portland Trail Blazers from the NBA playoffs with a 105-94 victory in the sixth game of their best-of-seven series.

The Sonics moved into the Western Conference finals, against either Denver or Milwaukee, for the first time in their 11-year NBA history by winning the first game of the series in Portland and taking all three on their home court.

The defending NBA champion Trail Blazers put on a courageous display in Seattle, a day after they had rolled over the Sonics in Portland, 113-89, to force the sixth game.

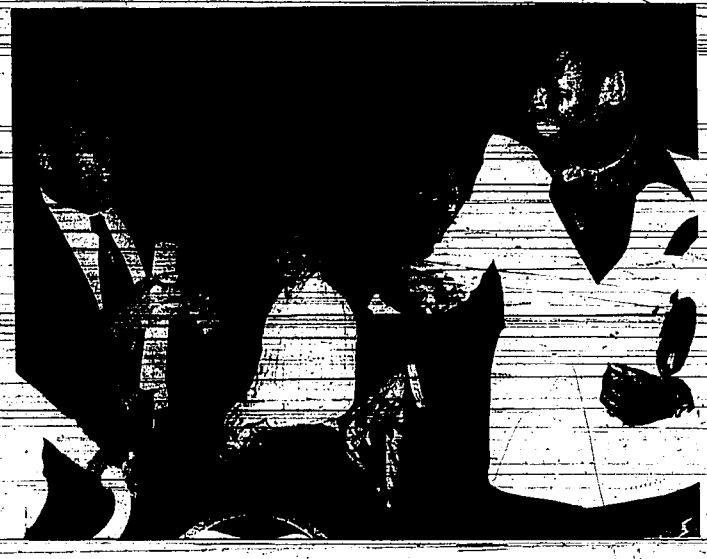

But the undermanned Trail Blazers wilted in the second half, as the Sonics surged to an 11-point advantage in the third period and a 16-point lead in the final period.

Portland Coach Jack Ramsay conceded defeat with 46 seconds remaining and the Sonics ahead 102-90 by walking over to shake Seattle Coach Lenny Wilkens' hand.

The Sonics took control of the game in the closing minutes of the first half. Trailing 43-39 at the 3:08 mark of the second period, Seattle ran off the final 12 points of the half to take a 55-49 halftime lead.

The Trail Blazers twice got within four points in the opening minutes of the quarter, but Seattle then steadily moved away until they led 102-86 with 1:27 remaining.

Seattle's 44-34 rebounding edge and 25-12 free-throw edge spelled the difference.

Court says no to Clemente suit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court Monday declined to reinstate a $7 million damage suit brought by the families of baseball star Roberto Clemente and two companions each killed on a flight to aid victims of the 1972 Nicaraguan earthquake.

The action lets stand a decision by the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which overturned a ruling in favor of the plaintiffs by the U.S. District Court in San Juan, P.R.

The survivors claimed the Federal Aviation Administration was negligent in failing to inspect the aircraft, which they said was known to be faulty, and not warning passengers of the possible danger.

Members of Clemente's family sought $5 million in damages, and the Lozano and Matias families $1 million each.

The First U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston overturned the district court ruling on Dec. 16, 1977, saying the FAA regional office directive on the plane cited by the plaintiffs by the U.S. District Court in San Juan, P.R. was not a statute or a regulation.

When it took off with relief supplies, the plane was reported carrying a 4,193-pound overload. It failed to gain altitude and crashed when the pilot tried to return to the airport.

Bruins rock Mt. Home twice

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Bruins completly outclassed the hapless Mountain Home Tigers Monday afternoon in a double header as they stopped the Tigers after five innings in both contests when the ten run rule was invoked.

The Bruins won the two games by scores of 12-2 and 13-1.

The first Bruin to face a Tiger pitcher was out on a fly ball but that was where the first inning for the Mt. Home team seemed to end. The Bruins scored nine runs in a row before the Tigers came alive to clamp down on the Twin Falls nine.

R. Brown was walked by the Tiger Pitcher Murcer and was sent home on a triple by Miller. Easley got a single to drive Miller home and scored himself on an error on the pitcher.

Eight of the first nine batters crossed the plate in the first inning for the Bruins.

The rest of the Bruin's nine runs came on solid hitting and baserunning. The Tigers got one run in the first inning and one in the sixth before the first game was called.

The second game was almost a replay of the first as the Bruins scored four runs in the first inning and nine in the third to slap the Tigers again.

The Mt. Home team could answer with only one run in the fourth inning and after five that game was called also.

Other than the triple by Miller in the first game, most of the Bruin runs came as a result of walks and errors by Tiger teammembers. The Bruins were aided by seven walks and two free passes to first base because of players being hit by the pitcher in the two games.

ABC to broadcast rematch between Leon Spinks, Ali

NEW YORK (UPI) — The American Broadcasting Company announced Monday it has signed an agreement with Top Rank to televise Leon Spinks' Sept. 15 defense of his WBA heavyweight title against Muhammad Ali in New Orleans.

The television package is estimated at $5.5 million and Ali said before a press conference of all groups involved that each fighter will earn $1 million for the 15-round bout.

Neither ABC nor promoter Bob Arum of Top Rank would divulge any figure for Spinks' return with Ali. The controversial Spinks, who is still under a drug possession charge in St. Louis, took the title from Ali on a 15-round decision in Las Vegas on Feb. 15.

"I don't know what I'll look for if I regain the title," said Ali. "I might want to enjoy for a while the feeling of being the first man to win the heavyweight championship three times.

"I'm 36 years-old. I can go four more years. I'm still faster than any of the heavyweights they have around today. I was faster than Spinks in that first fight when I won the eighth, ninth, 10th, 11th and 12th rounds. I just tired out in the 15th. I couldn't fight the afterburner. When the bell rang I still thought there was a possibility I had won the fight."

Spinks, clothes coordinated in black slacks and shirt and white jacket, refused to discuss his St. Louis situation. "We had ground rules that I wasn't going to talk about it," said Spinks, "and I'm not gonna to.

"What I gotta do is prove I'm the champ by beating Ali again. He'll be stronger next time, but with God's help I'll do it again. There's gonna be a good rumble but I'll win."

Ed Bell, a former federal criminal judge in Detroit and now Spinks' advisor, said his fighter will have a driver's license as of 4 p.m. Tuesday, issued by the state of Michigan.

Spinks was stopped twice in St. Louis for driving without a license, the second time leading to his current scrape with the law.

"There's no purpose to be served in continuing discussion on this matter," said Bell. "We'll meet with law enforcement people in St. Louis later this week and hope to settle the situation amicably."

Don Hubbard, president of the Louisiana Superdome, said "we'll have Mardi Gras in New Orleans in September. The battle of New Orleans will be greater than the Super Bowl."

Hubbard said that hotels are now backed up with reservation requests for the time leading up to the fight and that $250,000 in ticket sales have been made "and we haven't even advertised. We've had calls from England and France and next week the mayor of New Orleans will coordinate all fight efforts."

As a parting shot, Ali, who usually has a nickname for his opponents, said he was going to name Spinks "Blacula" before Leon got his two front teeth.

Draft players? No, cheerleaders

By JIM MURRAY
(c) 1978 Los Angeles Times

The Los Angeles Rams need a good running back, a tight end or a strong defensive tackle, but the front office is not swayed by this trivia. They went right to the heart of the matter. They deployed their scouts, collected film, took photographs and employed all the paraphernalia of top modern scouting recently to shore up the leaks in their program.

The Blue-Grey game? The Senior Bowl? Hula Bowl?

Hardly. They assembled at the taping of the finals of the National Cheerleading Championships at the Sports Arean, where every self-respecting NFL team had a delegation of ivory hunters. Everyone knows what any red-blooded American team needs is not a 6-6, 250-pound linebacker to pull the customers in, but a 5-2, 110-pound, 36-32-36 with moves Lynn Swann could never approximate.

The cheerleading finals were toped for showing on CBS network last week but the NFL covered it like the Rose Bowl. The finalists were cheerleading teams from the universities of North Carolina, Kansas, Florida, Pittsburgh and Southern California, with individual baton twirlers and trampoline artists, but the kids were competing for more than the $25,000 in scholarships. They were competing for a career in show biz, beginning, probably, at halftime in the Super Bowl and ending — who knows? — in the Oscar presentations.

Cheerleading is as venerable in football as the flying wedge. Nobody knows when the first guy leaped out of the stands to shout "Gimme an 'A'" but, legend has it, it was some drunk in Iowa before the turn of the century who first wanted the Hawkeyes to "Hold that line" or "Hit 'em again, harder!"

It proliferated into card tricks, simulated riverboats puffing up and down the field at the half, homecoming queens, salutes to yesterday and, finally, the Dallas Cowgirls, probably the most awesome aggregation to take a football field since the 1940 Chicago Bears. You talk about Front Fours and this bunch can match anybody.

Football has always lent itself to sideline exhortation and the best and worst aspects of musical comedy. Cole Porter, no less, wrote one of the early fight songs for Yale. Roda Booth, Oregon State University pioneered animated card tricks, with a beaver slapping it's tail on an Oregon duck.

Precision marching hit the game early. Millions went to the Army-Navy game annually not to see the clumsy athletes, but the cadet corps or the midshipmen march in.

Yale, naturally, turned to the ancient Greeks for its public cheering with the frog chorus from Aristophanes. "Brek-ek-ek-ex Co-ax Co-ax." Princeton contributed the first "Sis, Boom, Bah!" and Harvard weighed in with "Hold That Tiger!"

The cheers got commoner and more vulgar as they moved West. For one thing, "Brek-ek-ek-ex" became "Give 'em the ax!" "Fight on for old St." was sedate enough, but Arkansas' "Sooey, Pig" was hardly what Aristophanes had in mind. Neither was "Hook 'em, Horns!" at Texas or "Boomer Sooner" at Oklahoma.

But without the cheers, what would be left? A lot of lousy first downs, or two-yard gains over left tackle. A field goal by some Cygnet. And the Minnesota Vikings.

Every magazine editor, every pulp owner, every movie magnate, and every pulp fiction knows what you need to dress up an event is a whole bunch of pretty girls and energetic men. Sammy Baugh is OK if you're a completed pass freak, and there's probably nothing wrong with three-yard losses. But any football coach can tell you it's what's up front that counts. And the Dallas Cowboys won the double on that score last year — the Super Bowl and the Super Babes.

In the land of Cheryl Tiegs, Farrah Fawcett and Cheryl Ladd, the Rams have fielded a lineup of quarterback sacks and blocked punts. Even God to Allen knows the act needs reworking. But of course George is building out for the Florida Seafolli on the basis of experience.

A football team without a bunch of shapely wearing boots, and not much else, on the sidelines, might as well not have a center. The day will come when a scout stumbles triumphantly into the general manager's office to announce, "Boss, I have got a draft choice for you! Another Jim Brown!"

And the boss will scream and roar "Another Jim Brown!" Idiot. What this franchise needs is another Phyllis George! Now, go back out there and check drum majorettes, and if I catch you near a stadium or a locker room again, you're fired!"

ATTENTION is focused on first base as the Padres Ozzie Smith tries to get the runner at first. The Pirates beat the Padres 7-4.

Braves outlast Mets for 6-9 win

ATLANTA (UPI) — Biff Pocoroba doubled home pinch-runner Barry Bonnell in the eighth inning Monday to give the Atlanta Braves a come-from-behind 6-5 victory over the New York Mets.

The Braves went into the last of the eighth trailing 5-4, but Brian Asselstine led off with a triple and scored the tying run on a single by Jeff Burroughs who raised his batting average above the .400 mark. Bonnell came in as a pinch-runner for Burroughs, moved to second on a balk by reliever Skip Lockwood and raced home with the winning run when Pocoroba, who had also doubled in a run in the first inning, hit a ground-rule double into the Braves' bullpen.

The Mets, who picked up two unearned runs in the first innings, were leading 5-2 entering the last of the sixth, but the Braves got single runs in the sixth and seventh. Burroughs' sacrifice fly scored a run in the sixth and Jerry Royster singled home a seventh inning run. Royster earlier had a triple and a double and scored twice.

Braves' manager Bobby Cox was thrown out of the game in the top of the fifth when he got into an argument with home plate umpire Nick Colosi after the Braves' field television screen flashed a picture first base umpire Satch Davidson who had made a questionable call on a Braves' infield out in the bottom of the fourth.

Buddy J. Solomon, the Braves' fourth pitcher, worked the final two innings to pick up his first victory of the season.

Yankees nip Royals

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chris Chambliss' two-run single keyed a four-run seventh inning and the New York Yankees overcame their own errors of omission Monday night to score an 8-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

With the score tied 4-4, Willie Randolph led off the seventh with a single and after Reggie Jackson drew a walk one out later, Royals' Manager Whitey Herzog pulled starter and loser Paul Splittorff and brought on Doug Bird. Lou Piniella hit Bird's first pitch for a single to left to score Randolph and bring on another reliever, Steve Mingori, who was greeted by Chambliss' single up the middle. Chambliss, who went to third on the play when Royals' center fielder Willie Wilson misplayed the ball, scored the final run of the inning on a single by Craig Nettles.

Red Sox top Orioles 9-6

BOSTON (UPI) — Jim Rice, the defending American League home run champion, blasted a pair of two-run homers Monday night to power the Boston Red Sox to a 9-6 win over the Baltimore Orioles.

The loss snapped Baltimore's three-game winning streak.

Rice, who hit 39 homers last season, whacked a Nelson Briles pitch over the left field screen in the third inning following a Jack Brohamer single. Rice then hit his seventh homer of the year in the seventh after Rick Burleson had walked for Boston's final two runs.

Fred Lynn contributed a two-run double in a four-run, sixth inning that put Boston ahead 7-2.

Mike Torrez boosted his record to 3-1 by pitching the first six innings for the Red Sox before running into trouble in the seventh. Torrez loaded the bases on two walks and an infield hit opening the seventh before giving way to Tom Burgmeier, who finished walking Al Bumbry to force in a run. Burgmeier walked the next batter, Billy Smith, forcing in another run and finished with two more balls—throwing ae Bob Stanley came in to quell the threat.

Bumbry homered to lead off the ninth for Baltimore and the Orioles scored another run in the inning on Ken Singleton's RBI single.

Phillies 12, Reds 1

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Pitcher Steve Carlton, Richie Hebner and Bake McBride had three hits apiece Monday night to pace a 16-hit assault that handed Tom Seaver his third straight loss and sparked the Philadelphia Phillies to a nationally televised 12-1 rout of the Cincinnati Reds.

Carlton, in addition to his timely hitting, combined with Gene Garber on a five-hitter to gain his second victory in five decisions. Before departing in the third inning, Seaver, winless in six starts, was rapped for seven hits and seven runs, walked six and struck out two.

The Phillies bunched four singles with three walks while sending 10 batters to the plate during a five-run, first inning.

After giving up an unearned run in the second inning, Seaver exited in the third when the Phillies went ahead 7-0 as Carlton led off with a single and McBride followed with a double.

The Phillies added one more run in the fifth and then bunched together three hits with two walks and an error by Dave Tomlin to score four runs in the eighth inning.

Johnny Bench's fifth homer of the season, coming in the seventh inning, accounted for the Reds' only run.

Cincinnati's Pete Rose, hitless in four at bats, remained four hits shy of the 3,000-hit plateau.

Pirates 7, Padres 4

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Phil Garner and Jim Bibby each singled in runs in the eighth inning and Bibby pitched two innings of hitless relief Monday night to lift the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 7-4 victory over the San Diego Padres.

Garner singled into the gap between first and second with one out in the eighth to score Rennie Stennett, who had singled and advanced to second when Ed Ott walked, to spark a three-run rally that made Rattle Pingers 14, the loser Bibby, in his first at bat of the season, then singled to right to score Ott, and Mario Mendoza then hit into a force out to score Garner.

The Pirates also had rallied for three runs in the seventh to tie the game at four. Willie Stargell drove in the first run of that inning with a pinch-hit single, then Moreno singled in another run and Mendoza, pinch running for Stargell, scored on an error by Padres' shortstop Ozzie Smith.

Ott singled in the Pirates' first run in the second. The Padres had taken the lead on a two-run homer by Dave Winfield in the seventh. Bill Almon singled in another run in the fifth and Gene Tenace tripled in a run in the sixth.

Bibby, the third Pirate pitcher of the night, struck out two and walked won, to improve his record to 2-1.

Giants 2, Cards 1

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Terry Whitfield scored from second base on a wild pitch by reliever Mark Littell in the eighth inning Monday night to give the San Francisco Giants a 2-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Whitfield singled off starter and loser John Denny, 2-1, and went to second on a sacrifice bunt by Darrell Evans. Littell relieved and uncorked a wild pitch which allowed Whitfield to score.

The other Giant run came in the sixth on Jack Clark's double and a single by Larry Herndon, who got his first RBI since April 9.

Vida Blue, facing the Cardinals for the first time, allowed six hits in eight innings to gain his third victory in four decisions.

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1978:

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Not a good time to take any chances by putting in motion a new plan that has anything of a risky nature connected with it. At the same time, it is an excellent time to seek out and delve into all up-to-date information that will help you in the future.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Give more attention to home affairs and show more consideration for family members. Know what your personal goals are and how best to gain them. Avoid one who is anxious to gossip.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Take the time to be with good friends and talk over mutual interests, come to a fine understanding. Try not to be forceful where something important is concerned or you lose out instead.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Analyze what your true position is where interests are concerned of every size and nature. Plan how to improve it. Don't be so demanding with a loved; but give time to handle own affairs better.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Gain the favor of a prominent person you know so that you can improve in career matters. Become as efficient as possible and impress others favorably. Avoid one who is jealous of you.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) You have to change your attitude if you are to make a big success of an interest that has not been working well. Plan that trip you have in mind, but don't start right out now. Be wise.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Good time to pay bills and collect money due you. Be more encouraging with a loved one and come to a better understanding.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) If you clarify your ideas and motives with associates you can gain their cooperation easily now. Find a new method of doing things where public work is concerned and get better results.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You can get all your work done well if you use a new and more efficient method now. Come to a better understanding with fellow workers and increase production.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Know what your true aims are and how best to gain them now. Accept any invitations for social fun. Reach a fine rapport with one you love. Show you are devoted.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) A situation at home needs proper handling, so don't argue, but take care of it quietly, intelligently. Make sure business affairs are in good order.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You are able to comprehend data and written material, reports much better now, so make the most of this. Handle correspondence you have been putting off.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Get to work early on monetary affairs that are important to your welfare. Listen to what an adviser has to suggest and follow advice.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY he or she will be able to formulate new plans and carry through with them in a most wise and successful way. Teach early to complete whatever is once started. Don't neglect training or apoca to build up the body and ego either. An intellectual person here.

The matrimonial pollsters contend their studies indicate the man who kisses his wife goodbye when he leaves for work every morning averages a higher income than does the fellow who doesn't do that thing. Husbands who exercise the rituals of affection tend to be more painstaking, more stable, more methodical, thus higher earners, it's believed. Our love and War man says it's understandable. To him maybe.

The numerous medical malpractice suits are said to have prompted that bumper sticker seen of late on doctors' cars: "Feeling sick? Call your lawyer."

The slang word for a cousin's can-I-borrow attitude in German is Wurstigkeit meaning "sausage-ism," but I don't know why.

Maybe you didn't realize that a rat can go without water longer than can a camel.

TELEPHONE NUMBERS

Q. "In how many states are exchange words still used in some telephone numbers?"

A. Only two, Texas and New York. And New York's will all be converted by the end of this year.

Q. "What was the Trail of Tears?"

A. The route the Cherokee Indians took to Oklahoma after the federal government drove them out of the Great Smoky Mountains. A third of them died.

Q. "Who's the oldest golfer ever to win a professional tournament?"

A. Sam Snead who took the Greensboro Open in 1965 at age 52.

Q. "What's the average temperature of the world?"

A. 58 degrees F.

VASELINE

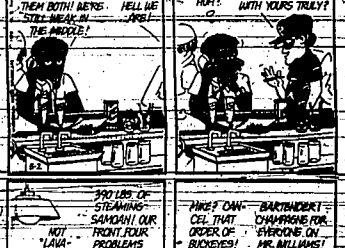

Robert Chesebrough, the fellow who concocted that petroleum jelly known as Vaseline, lived to age 96. And do you know to what he credited his longevity? The fact that he swallowed a spoonful of Vaseline every day of his life — 32 when he put the first batch of the stuff on the market.

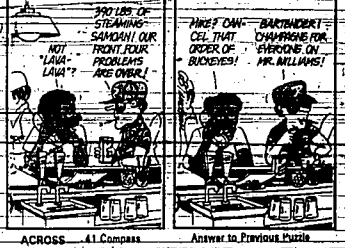

Am I peafedly asked if the Nazi Fuhrer Adolf Hitler ever really did own 9,000 acres in Colorado. So it was reported in 1942. By none other than the then mayor of Kit Carson, Colo., in fact. The 8,960 acres, supposedly inherited by Hitler from relatives in Germany, was four miles from Kit Carson, and neighboring ranchers grazed their stock on it.
